To the flow lake. Dryden.

What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, puſh'd on the red'ning ſtream. Blackmore.

Go to, I did not mean to chide you;
On with your tale. Rowe

3. In continuance; without ceaſing.

Let them ſleep, let them ſleep on,
Till this ſtormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn. Craſhaw

Sing on, ſing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd. Dryd.

You roam about, and never are at reſt;
By new deſires, that is, new torments poſſeſt:
As in a fev'riſh dream you ſtill drink on,
And wonder why your thirſt is never gone. Dryden.

The peaſants defy the ſun, they work on in the hotteſt part of the day without intermiſſion. Locke.

4. Not off; as, he is neither on nor off; that is, he is irreſolute.

5. Upon the body, as part of dreſs. His clothes were neither on nor off; they were diſordered. See OFF.

A long cloak he had on. Sidney.

Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in ſtays,
Her patches, paint, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phillis is but twenty-one. Prior.

A painted veſt prince Volteger had on,
Which from a naked Pict his grandſire won.
Blackmore.

6. It notes reſolution to advance forward; not backward.

Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thouſand ways, the nobleſt path we'll tread;
And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common ſacrifice to honour fall. Denham.

7. It is through almoſt all its ſignifications oppoſed to off, and means approach, junction, addition, or preſence.

ON. interject. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for to go on.

Therefore on, or ſtrip your ſword ſtark naked; for meddle you muſt. Shakſpeare.

Cheerly on, courteous friends,
To reap the harveſt of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of ſharp war. Shakſpeare.

On the enemy muſic! and tools and knaves expoſe,
And, ſince thou can'ſt not make a friend, make foes. Young.

ONCE. adv. [from one.]

1. One time.

Trees that bear maſt, are fruitful but once in two years; the caſtle is, the expence of fap. Bacon.

Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And after him the fatal meſſengers.
A dove, ſent forth once and again to ſpy
Green trees or ground. Milton.

Once ev'ry morn he anoint'd, and once at night. Cowley.

You came out like ſome great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diverſion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden

O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to ſuſtain
My right, and execute my juſt diſdain. Dryden.

In your ſucceſsful days,
Once more reſume the great Appollo's praiſe. Pope.

2. A ſingle time.

Who this hour is, he does not once tell us. Locke.

3. The ſame time.

At once with him they roſe.
Their riſing all at once was as the ſound
Of thunder heard remote Milton.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he ſtream'd the breaſt,
And on the lips a burning kiſs impreſs'd. Dryden.

4. At a point of time indivifible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,
But all at once, at once the winds arife,
The thunders roll. Dryden.

Now that the fixed ſtars, by reaſon of their immenſe diſtance appear like points, unleſs ſo far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the moon paſſes over them and eclipſes them, their light vaniſhes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

5. One time, though no more.

Futemos, thoſe ill deeds that fully ſame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder ſon. Dryden.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once upon the firſt impreſſion, and is never afterwards in a declining ſtate Atterbury

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage bed conveys. Denham.

My fool had once ſome fooliſh fondneſs for thee.
But hence 'tis gone. Addiſon.

8. Once ſeems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.

ONE. adj. [an, ane, Saxon; een, Dutch; ein, German; ἑν, Greek.]

1. Leſs than two; ſingle; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.

Pindarus the poet, and one of the wiſeſt, acknowledged alſo one God the moſt high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh

Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,
And from thoſe parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryd.

2. Indefinitely, any; ſome one.

We shall
Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakspeare

I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakspeare

3. It is added to any.

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matthew

If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left it fair after death, without the touch of his successors, there were scarce colour to despise it. Suckling

4. Different; diverse; opposed to another.

What a precise is counted to have to reason, like two others, commanding one another's fortunes. Shakspeare.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryd.

Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet

It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.

My legs were closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison.

There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smallridge.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbuthnot.

At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifle them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

5. One of two: opposed to the other.

Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deuteronomy.

Both the matter of the stone and marchasite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other as being of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.

6. Not many; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith. There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints, which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for if a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth. Pearson.

7. Particularly one.

One day when Phœbe fair,
With all her band was following the chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Spenser.

One day, in turning some uncultur'd ground,
In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,
His mattock met resistance, and behold,
A casket burst, with diamonds fill'd, and gold. Harte.

8. Some future.

Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.

ONE. n. s. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.

1. A single person.

If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakspeare.

Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker.

From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden.

If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.

When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descend to view the muses' humble seat. Granville.

2. A single mass or aggregate.

It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.

3. The first hour.

Till one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shakspeare.

4. The same thing.

I answer'd not again:
But that's all one. Shakspeare.

To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one, as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts.

6. A person, by way of eminence.

Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckoned one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shaksp.

7. A distinct or particular person.

That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon.

No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon.

The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper. Hammond.

One or other sees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends. Dryden.

8. Persons united.

As I have made ye one, lords one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Shakspeare.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinando and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves. Bacon.

He is not at one with himself what account to give of it. Tillotson.

10. [On l'on, French. It is used sometimes as a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any person; any man indefinitely.

It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erona is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbuthnot.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroe's comment. Baker.

11. A person of particular character.

Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakspeare.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.

One who contemn'd divine and human laws. Dryden.

Forgive me, if that title I afford
To one, whom Nature meant to be a lord. Harte.

12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular, or plural, is in my ear, not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.

Does the son receive a natural life? The infant enjoys a civil one: that's but the matter, this the form. Holyday.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glanville.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Wake.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another: the storm beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Davenant.

ONE berry. n. s. [aconitum, Latin.] Wolfbane.

O'NEEYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

A sign post dauber would disdain to paint
The oneey'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden

The mighty family
Of oney'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.

ONEIROCRI'TICAL. adj. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr. oneirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison.

ONEIROCRI'TICK. n. s. [ὀνειροκριτικὸς, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.

Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison.

O'NENESS. n. s. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.

Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the Father when he came down from heaven and was incarnate. Hammond

O'NERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, French.] Fitted for carriage or burdens; comprising a burden.

To O'NERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burden.

ONERA'TION. n. f. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.

O'NEROUS. adj. [onereux, French; onerosus, Latin.] Burdenſome; oppreſſive.

A baniſhed perſon, abſent out of neceſſity, retains all things onerous to himſelf, as a puniſhment for his crime. Ayliffe.

O'NION. n. f. [oignon, Fr. cæpe, Latin.] A plant.

If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a ſhower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Shakſpeare.

I am ſick, am onion-ey'd. Shakſpeare.

This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No ſav'ry diſh without an onion:
But leſt you kiſſing ſhould be ſpoil'd,
Your onions muſt be throughly boil'd. Swift.

O'NLY. adj. [from one, oncly, or onelike.]

1. Single; one and no more.

Of all whom fortune to my ſword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.

2. This and no other.

The only child of ſhadeful Saxernake Drayton.

The logick now in uſe has long poſſeſſed the chair, as the only art taught in the ſchools for the direction of the mind in the ſtudy of the ſciences. Locke.

3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for muſick.

O'NLY. adv.

1. Simply; ſingly; merely; barely.

I propoſe my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.

The poſterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their fathers vices, and that not only by a juſt judgment, but from the natural courſe of things Tillotſon.

All who deſerve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himſelf, needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with preſent quiet and ſatisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelſon.

Nor muſt this contration be exerciſed by us only for groſſer evils, but when we have the beſt. Wake.

2. So and no otherwiſe.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. Genesis.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

O'NOMANCY. n. f. [ὄνομα and μαντία.] Divination by a name.

Deſtinies were ſuperſtitiouſly, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were tunable, and fatal accidents concurred herein with voluntary motion Camden.

ONOMA'NTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μάντις.] Predicting by names.

Theoclatus, when curious to know the ſucceſs of his wars againſt the Romans, an onomantical or name-ſwifard Jew, wiſhed him to ſhut up a number of ſwine and give ſome of them Roman names, others Gothiſh names with ſeveral marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'NSET. n. f. [on and ſet.]

1. Attack; ſtorm; aſſault; firſt brunt.

As well the ſoldier dieth, which ſtandeth ſtill, as he that gives the braveſt onſet. Sidney.

Ill breathleſs, weary, faint,
Him ſpying, with freſh onſet he aſſail'd,
And doubling new his courage, ſeeming quaint,
Struck him ſo hugely, that through great conſtraint
He made him ſtoop. Spenſer.

The ſhout
Of battle now began, and rushing ſound
Of onſet. Milton.

Sometimes it gains a point, and preſently it finds itſelf baffled and beaten off; yet ſtill there was the onſet, attacks the difficulty afreſh, plants this reaſoning and that argument, like ſo many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obſtinate conſcious truth. South.

Without men and proviſions it is impoſſible to ſecure conqueſts that are made in the firſt onſets of an invaſion. Addiſon.

Obſerve
The firſt impetuous onſets of his grief;
Uſe every artifice to keep him reſtleſs. Philips.

2. Something added or ſet on by way of ornamental appendage. This ſenſe, ſays Nicholſon, is ſtill retained in Northumberland, where onſet means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleneſs;
And for an onſet, Titus, to advance
Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empreſs. Shakſpeare.

To O'NSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſet upon; to begin. Not uſed.

This for a while was hotly onſetting and a reaſonable price offered, but ſoon cooled again. Carew.

O'NSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and ſlay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; ſtorm; onſet. Not in uſe.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t' aſſault,
Then call'd a council, which was beſt,
By ſiege or onſlaught to inveſt
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By ſtorm and onſlaught to proceed Hudibras.

ONTO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [from ontology.] One who conſiders the affections of being in general; a metaphyſician.

ONTO'LOGY. n. ſ. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The ſcience of the affections of being in general; metaphyſicks.

The modes, accidents, and relations that belong to various beings, are copiouſly treated of in metaphyſicks, or more properly ont logy. Watts.

O'NWARD. adv. [onpeard, Sax.]

1. Forward; progreſſively.

My lord,
When you went onward to this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a ſoldier's eye. Shakſpeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his ſeat,
The monſter moving onward, came as faſt
With horrid ſtrides. Milton.

Him thro' the ſpicy foreſt onward come
Adam diſcern'd, as in the door he ſat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton.

Not one looks backward, onward ſtill he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his noſe. Pope.

2. In a ſtate of advanced progreſſion.

Philoxenus came to ſee how onward the fruits were of his friend's labour. Sidney.

You are already ſo far onward of your way, that you have forſaken the imitation of ordinary converſe. Dryden.

3. Somewhat further.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To theſe dark ſteps, a little further on. Milton.

O'NYCHA. n. ſ. It is found in two different ſenſes in Scripture.—The odoriferous ſhell, and the ſtone onyx. The greateſt part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous ſhell. The onyx is fiſhed for in the Indies, where grows the ſpicenard, the food of this fiſh and what makes its ſhell ſo aromatick.

Calmet.

Take ſweet ſpices, onycha, and galbanum Exod.

O'NYX. n. ſ. [ὄνυξ] A ſemipellucid gem, of which there are ſeveral ſpecies; but the blueiſh white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitimus of the ancients. Hill.

Nor are her rare endowments to be told
For flattering fame by Ophir ſhown. Sandys.
The blue-eyed daphne, or rich onyx ſtone. Sandys.

The onyx is an Oriental variety of the agat kind. It is of a dark brown colour, in which is a plate of a bluiſh white, and ſometimes of red: when on one or both ſides the white, there happens to be alſo a reddiſh or freſh colour, the jewellers call the ſtone a ſardonyx. Woodward on Foſſils.

OOZE. n. ſ. [either from eaux, waters, Fr. or paer, wetneſs, Sax.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; ſlime.

My ſon i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakſpeare.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze of ſalt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames raiſ'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he ſought his ſedgy bed,
And ſhrunk his waters back into his urn Dryden.

2. Soft flow; ſpring. This ſeems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his firſt fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the ſea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by ſtealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A wat'riſh humour ſwell'd and ooz'd agen Dryden.

The lily drinks
The latent rill, ſcarce oozing thro' the grals. Thomſon.

O'OZY. adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; ſlimy.

From his oozy bed,

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opaco, Latin.] To ſhade; to cloud; to darken; to obſcure.

The ſame corpuſcles upon the unſtopping of the glaſs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. ſ. [opacité, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudineſs; want of tranſparency.

Can any thing eſcape eyes in whoſe opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, ſhadow or opacity, we ſhould never have had any determinate conceit of darkneſs. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, ſo much hath it of opacity, and by ſo much the more muſt it reſiſt the tranſmiſſion of the ſpecies Ray.

The leaſt parts of almoſt all bodies, are in ſome meaſure tranſparent, and the opacity of thoſe bodies ariſeth from the multitude of reflexions cauſed in their internal parts. Newton.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obſcure; not tranſparent.

When he perceives that opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging right to have an equal diffuſion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more fubtile far than they, and conſequently divitible into leſſer atoms; and having leſſer pores, gives leſs reaſon to our eyes to miſs light. Digby.

Upon the hum opacous globe
Of this round world, whoſe firſt convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, incloſ'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkneſs old,
Satan alighted. Milton.

O'PAL. n. ſ. [opalus, Lat.] A very elegant and ſingular kind of ſtone; it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opake, and leſs hard. It is in the pebble ſhape, from the head of a pin to the bigneſs of a walnut. It is naturally bright, and ſhows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it reſembles the fineſt mother of pearl, its baſis ſeeming a blueiſh or greeniſh white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light. Hill.

Thy mind is a very opal Shakſpeare.

An empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd ſquare or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living ſaphir. Milton.

We have this ſtone from Germany, and is the ſame with the opal of the ancients. Woodward.

OPA'QUE. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; not tranſparent; cloudy.

They
Shot upward ſtill direct, whence no way round
Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton.

Theſe unapparent, fixt ſtars were actually extinguiſhed and turned into more opaque and groſs planet-like bodies. Cheyne.

To OPE. } To OPEN. } v. a. [open, Sax. op, Islandick; oppa, Greek; a hole. Ope is used only in poetry, when one syllable is more convenient than two.]

1. To unclose; to unlock; to put into such a state as that the inner parts may be seen or entered: the contrary to shut.

The world's mine oyster,
Which I with sword will open. Shakspeare.
Before you fight, ope the letter. Shakspeare.
They cannot touch us harm and woe,
To ope the gates, and to let in our foe. Fairfax.
If a man openeth a pit, and not covereth it, and an ox fall therein, the owner of the pit shall make it good. Exodus.
Let us pass through your land, and none shall do even any hurt, howbeit they would not open unto him. 1 Maccabees.
Open thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction. Proverbs.
Adam, now ope thine eyes, and first behold
Th' effects which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee. Milton.
The draw-bridges at Amsterdam part in the middle, and a vessel, though under sail, may pass them without the help of any one on shore, for the mast-head, or brick-work of the ship bearing against the bridge on the middle, opens it. Brown.
Our fleet Apollo sends,
Where Tuscan Tyber rolls with rapid force,
And where Numicius opes his holy sources. Dryden.
When first you ope your doors, and passing by,
The sad ill omen'd object meets your eye. Dryden.
My old wounds are open'd at this view,
And in thy murderer's presence bleed anew. Dryd.
When the matter is made, the side must be opened to let it out Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To show; to discover.

The English did adventure far for to open the north parts of America. Abbot

3. To divide; to break.

Consider against what kind of opinators the reason above given is levelled. Hale.

To OPI'NE. v. n. [opinor, Lat.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that fortakes
And haunts by fits those whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deep hid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPI'NIATIVE. adj. [from opinion.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opiniative uncertainties, like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glanville.

OPINIA'TOR. n. s. [opiniatre, Fr.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opinators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of? Raleigh.

Essex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a stout and surly nature, a great opinator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his great hopes, and forced to end his days in a mean condition, as it is pity but all such politick opinators should. South.

OPINIATTRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn; inflexible.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke.

So much as we ourselves comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains makes us not one jot the more knowing.

though they happen to be true: what in them was ſcience, is in us but opiniatrety. Locke.

I can paſs by opiniatry, and the buſy meddling of thoſe who thruſt themſelves into every thing. Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatrety in leaving me: but he ſhall not get rid ſo. Pope.

OPI'NION. n. ſ. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Perſuaſion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, ſettled in the imagination, but never arriving at the underſtanding, there to obtain the tincture of reaſon. Ben Jonſon.

Opinion is, when the aſſent of the underſtanding is ſo far guided by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one perſuaſion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hale.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees diſcover and unmaſk that fallacy of ungrounded perſuaſions; but confirms the dictates and ſentiments of nature. Wilkins.

Bleſt be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominion,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happineſs is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no ſuch ſettled cuſtom hath made it law, there it hath force only according to the ſtrength of reaſon and circumſtances joined with it, or as it ſhews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out againſt the common ſenſe and opinion of all mankind, that there is no ſuch thing as a future ſtate of miſery for ſuch as have lived ill here? South.

Charity itſelf commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendſhip, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend. South.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning hens, that where there are divers children the eldeſt ſon has the right to be heir. Locke.

Philoſophers are of opinion, that infinite ſpace is poſſeſſed by God's infinite omnipreſence. Locke.

A ſtory out of Boccalini ſufficiently ſhews us the opinion that judicious author entertained of the criticks. Addiſon.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms ſmall matters are of great moment, eſpecially when they ſerve to raiſe an opinion of commanders. Hayward.

Howſoever I have no opinion of thoſe things; yet ſo much I conceive to be true, that ſtrong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate. Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own perſon and dreſs, ſhe would never be angry at thoſe who are of the opinion with herſelf. Law.

To OPI'NION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of uſe, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opinioned the ſouls of wiſe men dwell about the moon, and thoſe of fools wandered about the earth: whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death. Broken.

That the ſoul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimention, is generally opinioned. Glanv.

OPI'PAROUS. adj. [opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. Dict.

OPITULA'TION. n. ſ. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. Dict.

O'PIUM. n. ſ. A juice, partly of the reſinous, partly of the gummy kind; brought to us in flat cakes or maſſes very heavy and of a denſe texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark browniſh yellow; its ſmell is of a dead faint kind; and its taſte very bitter and very acrid.

It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the Eaſt-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy, with which the fields of Aſia-Minor are in many places ſown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet ſoft, green, and full of juice, inciſions are made in them, and from every one of theſe a few drops flow of a milky juice, which ſoon hardens into a ſolid conſiſtence. The fineſt opium proceeds from the firſt inciſions. What we gengrally have is the mere crude juice, worked up with water, or honey ſufficient to bring it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing, and diſcutient, and greatly promotes ſuppuration. A moderate doſe of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet cuſtom will make people bear a dram, but in that caſe nature is vitiated. Its firſt effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and diſſipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle: it afterwards quiets the ſpirits, eaſes pain, and diſpoſes to ſleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the ſpirits become lower than before, and the pulſe languid. An immoderate doſe of opium brings on drunkenneſs, cheerfulneſs, and loud laughter, at firſt, and, after many terrible ſymptoms, death itſelf. Thoſe who have accuſtomed themſelves to an immoderate uſe of opium are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtleſs; they loſe their appetite, and grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forſook and giv'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milt.

The colour and taſte of opium are, as well as its ſoporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

O'PLE-TREE. n. ſ. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A ſort of tree. Ainſw.

OPOBA'LSAMUM. n. ſ. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPO'PONAX. n. ſ. [Latin.] A gum reſin in ſmall looſe granules, and ſometimes in large maſſes, of a ſtrong diſagreeable ſmell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taſte; brought to us from the Eaſt, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. Hill.

O'PPIDAN. n. ſ. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townſman; an inhabitant of a town.

To OPPI'GNERATE. v. a. [oppignero, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in uſe.

OPPO'NENT. n. ſ. [opponens, Latin.]

1. Antagoniſt; adverſary.

2. One who begins the diſpute by raiſing objections to a tenet: correlative to the defendant or reſpondent.

Inaſmuch as ye go about to deſtroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impoſe on us that which we think not ourſelves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exerciſe his office, and ſeaſonably commit the opponent with the reſpondent, like a long practiſed moderator. More.

OPPORTU'NE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Lat.] Seaſonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliſs, and the perpetual conſtancy of his proſperous ſucceſſes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in ſpite of fate,
Nearer our ancient ſeat; perhaps in view
Of thoſe bright confines, whence with neigh'bring arms
And opportune excurſion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton.

Conſider'd every creature, which of all
Moſt opportune might ſerve his wiles; and found
The ſerpent ſubtleſt beaſt of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTU'NELY. adv. [from opportune.] Seaſonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was reſolved to chuſe a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being ſituate ſo opportunely to annoy England either for coaſt or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Againſt theſe there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity, whereof I am therefore opportunely induced to ſay ſomewhat. Wotton.

The experiment does opportunely ſupply the deficiency. Boyle

OPPORTU'NITY. n. ſ. [opportunité, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; ſuitableneſs of circumſtances to any end.

A wiſe man will make more opportunities than he finds. Mens behaviour ſhould be like their apparel, not too ſtraight, but free for exerciſe. Bacon.

Opportunity, like a ſudden guſt,
Hath ſwell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempeſt.
Accurſed opportunity!
That work'ſt our thoughts into deſires, deſires
To reſolutions; thoſe being ripe and quicken'd,
Thou giv'ſt them birth, and bring'ſt them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counſel wiſe,
Yet length ſtill loſes opportunities. Denham.

I had an opportunity to ſee the cloud deſcend, and after it was paſt, to aſcend again ſo high as to get over part of the mountain. Broken's Travels.

Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy deſire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterbury.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long deſcriptions of the night. Broome.

To OPPO'SE. v. a. [oppoſer, Fr. oppono, Latin.]

1. To act againſt; to be adverſe; to hinder; to reſiſt.

O'RATOR. n. f. [orateur, Fr. orator, Lat.]

1. A publick speaker; a man of eloquence.

Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shakspeare.

As when of old some orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd,
Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience. Milton.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration. Watkins.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd,
In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

ORATO'RICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts

When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd. Shaksp.

When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard! Shakspeare.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than loudest orator. Milton.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surprised. Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making some part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, had the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory Arbuthnot.

3. [oratoire, French.]

Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine services. Aylife.

They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

ORB. n. f. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Lat.]

14. In architecture.

A ſyſtem of the ſeveral members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilaſters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, eſpecially thoſe of a column; ſo as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which ſome of the parts ought to have on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian; and two Italian, viz. the Tuſcan and compoſite. The whole is compoſed of two parts at leaſt, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the moſt; where there is a pedeſtal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedeſtal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the baſe, the ſhaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the ſeveral orders.

In the Tuſcan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickneſs of the ſhaft at the bottom, the pedeſtal having two; the column with baſe and capital, ſeven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedeſtal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the Ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the Corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedeſtal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the compoſite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedeſtal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or ſpace between columns in the Tuſcan order, is four diameters. In the Doric order, two and three quarters; in the Ionic order, two and a quarter; in the Corinthian order, two; and in the compoſite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

1. The act of yawning.
2. Unuſual ſleepineſs; careleſneſs.

If perſons of circumſpect piety have been overtaken, what ſecurity can there be for our wreckleſs oſcitancy? Government of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the oſcitancy of tranſcribers, who, to diſpatch their work the ſooner, uſed to write all numbers in cyphers. Spectator.

OSCI'TANT. adj. [oſcitans, Latin.]

1. Yawning; unuſually ſleepy.
2. Sleepy; ſluggiſh.

Our oſcitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now ſend none back again. Decay of Piety.

OSCITA'TION. n. f. [oſcito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I ſhall defer conſidering this ſubject till I come to my treatiſe of oſcitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler.

O'SIER. n. f. [oſier, Fr. vitex, Lat.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are uſed for baſket-work.

The rank of oſiers, by the murmuring ſtream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shakſpeare.

Ere the ſun advance his burning eye,
I muſt fill up this oſier cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakſpeare.

Cur comes crown'd with oſier, fegs, and weeds. Drayton.

Bring them for food ſweet boughs and oſiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick ſhut. May.

Like her no nymph can willing oziers bend,
In baſket-works, which painted ſtreaks commend. Dryden.

Along the marſhes ſpread,
We make the oſier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'SMUND. n. f. A plant: It is ſometimes uſed in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'SPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from oſſifraga, Lat.] The ſea eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fiſh in the water turn up their bellies, and lie ſtill for him to ſeize which he pleaſes. Hanmer.

I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the oſpray to the fiſh, who takes it
By ſovereignty of nature. Shakſpeare.

Among the fowls ſhall not be eaten, the eagle, the oſſifrage, and the oſpray. Numbers.

O'SSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard ſubſtance ariſing on the inſide of a horſe's knee, among the ſmall bones; it grows out of a gummy ſubſtance which faſtens thoſe bones together. Farrier's Dict.

O'SSICLE. n. f. [oſſiculum, Latin.] A ſmall bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whoſe right conſtitution depends the due tenſion of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muſcle, which ſerves to draw one of theſe oſſicles, fixt to the tympanum, before it oſſified, the tenſion of that membrane ceaſing, ſound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder.

OSSI'FICK. adj. [oſſa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony ſubſtance.

If the caries be ſuperficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments conſume the moiſture in the caries, dry the bone, and diſpoſe it, by virtue of its oſſifick faculty, to thruſt out callus, and make ſeparation of its caries. Wiſeman.

OSSIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from oſſify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony ſubſtance.

Oſſifications or indurations of the artery, appear ſo conſtantly in the beginnings of aneuriſms, that it is not eaſy to judge whether they are the cauſe or the effect of them. Sharp.

OSSI'FRAGE. n. ſ. [oſſifraga, Lat. oſſifrague, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whoſe fleſh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The oſſifraga or oſpray, is thus called, becauſe it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is ſaid to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occaſion that the Latins call it avis buſtaria. See OSPRAY. Calmet.

To O'SSIFY. v. a. [oſſa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyſt is generally oſſified. Sharp.

OSSI'VOROUS. adj. [oſſa and voro.] Devouring bones.

The bone of the gullet is not in all creatures alike anſwerable to the body or ſtomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and ſwallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other oſſivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham.

O'SSUARY. n. ſ. [oſſuarium, Lat.] A charnelhouſe; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Dict.

OST. } n. ſ. A veſſel upon which hops or OUST. } malt are dried. Dict.

OSTE'NT. n. ſ. [oſtentum, Lat.]

1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.

Uſe all th' obſervance of civility,
Like one well ſtudied in a ſad oſtent,
To pleaſe his grandam. Shakſpeare.

2. Show; token. Theſe ſenſes are peculiar to Shakſpeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefeſt thoughts
To courtſhip, and ſuch fair oſtents of love
As ſhall conveniently become you there. Shakſp.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To ſtirre our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact ſo cleane
Of all ill as our ſacrifice, ſo fearfull an oſtent
Should be the iſſue. Chapman.

Latinus, frighted with his dire oſtent,
For counſel to his father Faunus went;
And ſought the ſhades renown'd for prophecy,
Which near Albunia's ſulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.

OSTENTA'TION. n. ſ. [oſtentation, French; oſtentatio, Latin.]

1. Outward ſhow; appearance.

If theſe ſhows be not outward, which of you
But is four Volſcians?—
—March on my fellows;
Make good this oſtentation, and you ſhall
Divide in all with us. Shakſpeare.

You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The oſtentation of our love. Shakſpeare.

2. Ambitious diſplay; boaſt; vain ſhow. This is the uſual ſenſe.

If all theſe ſecret ſprings of detraction fail, yet a vain oſtentation of wit ſets a man on attacking an eſtabliſhed name, and ſacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of thoſe about him. Spectator.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were ſometimes inclined to oſtentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, ſays he, that you do not your alms before men, to be ſeen. Atterbury.

With all her luſtre, now, her lover warms:
Then out of oſtentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to ſtrike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no oſtentation of the means by which this is done; the ſpectator is only to feel the reſult in his boſom. Reynolds.

3. A ſhow; a ſpectacle. Not in uſe.

The king would have me preſent the princeſs with ſome delightful oſtentation, ſhow, pageant, antick, or firework. Shakſpeare.

OSTENTA'TIOUS. adj. [oſtento, Latin.] Boaſtful; vain; fond of ſhow; fond to expoſe to view.

Your modeſty is ſo far from being oſtentatious of the good you do, that it bluſhes even to have it known; and therefore I muſt leave you to the ſatisfaction of your own conſcience, which, though a ſilent panegyrick, is yet the beſt. Dryden.

They let Ulyſſes into his diſpoſition, and he ſeems to be ignorant, credulous, and oſtentatious. Broome.

OSTENTA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from oſtentatious.] Vainly; boaſtfully.

OSTENTA'TIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from oſtentatious.] Vanity; boaſtfulneſs.

OSTENTA'TOUR. n. ſ. [oſtentateur, Fr. oſtento, Lat.] A boaſter; a vain ſetter to ſhow.

OSTE'OCOLLA. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and κολλάω; oſteocolle, Fr.] Oſteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill.

Oſteocolla is a ſpar, generally coarſe, concreted with earthy or ſtony matter, precipitated by water, and incruſted upon ſticks, ſtones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

OSTEO'COPE. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and κόπτω; oſteocope, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompaſs them.

OSTEO'LOGY. n. ſ. [ὀστέον and λέγω; oſteologie, Fr.] A deſcription of the bones.

Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteneſs in diſſection of dead bodies, and his great ſkill in oſteology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler.

OSTI'ARY. n. ſ. [oſtium, Lat.] The opening at which a river diſembogues itſelf.

It is received, that the Nilus hath ſeven oſtiaries, that is, by ſeven channels diſburtheneth itſelf unto the ſea. Brown.

O'STLER. n. ſ. [hoſtelier, Fr.] The man who takes care of horſes at an inn.

The ſmith, the oſtler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift.

O'STLERY. n. ſ. [hoſtelerie, Fr.] The place belonging to the oſtler.

O'STRACISM. n. ſ. [ὀστρακισμός; oſtraciſme, Fr.] A manner of paſſing ſentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a ſhell which the voter threw into a veſſel. Baniſhment; public cenſure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an oſtraciſm, and departs;
Profit, eaſe, fitneſs, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Publick envy is as an oſtraciſm, that eclipſeth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon.

Hyperboles by ſuffering did traduce
The oſtraciſm, and ſham'd it out of uſe. Cleaveland.

This man, upon a ſlight and falſe accuſation of favouring arbitrary power, was baniſhed by oſtraciſm; which in Engliſh would ſignify, that they voted he ſhould be removed from their preſence and council for ever. Swift.

O'STRACITES. n. ſ. Oſtracites expreſſes the common oyſter in its foſſil ſtate. Hill.

O'STRICH. n. ſ. [autruche, French; ſtruthio, Latin.] Oſtrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very ſhort, and the neck about four or five ſpans. The feathers of its wings are in great eſteem, and are uſed as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are ſtained of ſeveral colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly; but uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running more ſwiftly. The oſtrich ſwallows bits of iron or braſs, in the ſame manner as other birds will ſwallow ſmall ſtones or gravel, to aſſiſt in digeſting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the ſand, and the ſun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an oſtrich, and ſwallow my ſword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakſpeare.

Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the oſtrich? Job.

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their oſtrich ſtomachs make their ſwords their meat. Cleaveland.

Modern oſtriches are dwindled to meer larks, in compariſon with thoſe of the ancients. Arbuthnot.

OTACOU'STICK. n. ſ. [ὦτα and ἀκούω; otacouſtique, Fr.] An inſtrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is ſupplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacouſtick, is ſo directed backward, as to receive the ſmalleſt and moſt diſtant ſound that comes behind her. Grew.

O'THER. pron. [oðeր, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the ſame; not this; different. In this ſenſe it ſeems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the ſubſtantive is ſuppreſſed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination: as, of laſt week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions ſome are better than other ſome. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd
That they have don't?—
—Who dares receive it other? Shakſpeare.

The diſmayed matrons and maidens, ſome in their houſes, other ſome in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard diſtreſs. Knowles.

He that will not give juſt occaſion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beaſts, where the ſtrongeſt carries; and ſo lay a foundation for perpetual diſorder and miſchief, tumult, ſedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypotheſis ſo loudly cry out againſt, muſt of neceſſity find out another ſtate of government. Locke.

No leaſes ſhall ever be made other than leaſes for years not exceeding thirty one, in poſſeſſion, and not in reverſion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but ſome one elſe. In this ſenſe it is a ſubſtantive, and has a genetive and plural.

Were I king,
I ſhould cut off the nobles for their lands;
Deſire his jewels and this other's houſe. Shakſp.

Phyſicians are ſome of them ſo conformable to the will of the patient, as they preſs not the cure of the diſeaſe; and ſome others are ſo regular in proceeding according to art, as they reſpect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confuſion ariſes, when the one will put their fickle into the other's harveſt. Leſley.

Never allow yourſelves to be idle, whilſt others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Law.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how well.
Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controling worth in goodneſs, that the will cannot but like and deſire it; and on the other ſide, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itſelf to the affections of mankind, but under the diſguiſe of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowlineſs of mind let each eſteem other better than themſelves. Philippians.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'ſt thou her, nor could ſhe thee ſurvive.
Dryden.

5. Something beſide.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the firſt;
A third is like the former. Shakſpeare.

7. The third paſt.

Bind my hair up; as 'twas yeſterday?
No, nor the t'other day. Ben Johnſon.

8. It is ſometimes put elliptically for other thing; ſomething different.

I can expect no other from thoſe that judge by ſingle fights and raſh meaſures, than to be thought fond or inſolent. Glanville.

O'THERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If Sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakſpeare.

O'THERGUISE. adv. [other and guiſe. This is often pronounced and ſometimes written otherguefs.] Of another kind.

O'THERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had acceſs to the temple and ſynagogues, but as Chriſtians they were of neceſſity forced otherwhere to aſſemble themſelves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former ſufferings, otherwhere are found.
Milton.

O'THERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

O'THERWISE. adv. [other and wiſe.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatſoever God reveals as neceſſary for all chriſtian men to do and believe, the ſame we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwiſe, which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the ſame thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or elſe otherwiſe, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for ſuch things are not ſo infallible, but that there is a poſſibility that the things may be otherwiſe. Wilkins.

In theſe good things, what all others ſhould practiſe, we ſhould ſcarce know to practice otherwiſe. Spratt.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwiſe. Addiſon.

2. By other cauſes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Liſborn, and returned with the loſs, by ſickneſs and otherwiſe, of eight thouſand men. Raleigh.

3. In other reſpects.

It is ſaid truly, that the beſt men otherwiſe, are not always the beſt in regard of ſociety. Hooker.

Men ſeldom conſider God any otherwiſe than in relation to themſelves, and therefore want ſome extraordinary benefit to excite their attention, and engage their love. Rogers.

O'TTER. n. ſ. [oter, Sax. lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fiſh.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better ſwimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is ſelin, or a long taper: ſo that he may not be unfitly called putorcus aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himſelf burrows on the water-ſide, as a bevir; is ſometimes tamed, and taught by nimbly ſurrounding the fiſhes, to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's ſkin ſtuffed with hay. Spectator.

Would ye preſerve a num'rous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chaſe;
Th' amphibious monſter ranges all the ſhores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores.
Gay.

O'VAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, Lat. an egg.] Oblong; reſembling the longitudinal ſection of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itſelf on both ſides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addiſon on Italy.

Mercurius, neareſt to the central ſun,
Does on an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our ſight,
In ſolar glory ſunk. Blackmore.

O'VAL. n. ſ.

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the ſhape of an egg. Watts.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tuſk. Ainſworth.

O'VEN. n. ſ. [open, Sax.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven ſent
A ſmoke of fire, that flaſhing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenſer.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakſpeare.

Rats have been found in ovens and other hollow cloſe places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they ſleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

O'VER hath a double ſignification in the names of places, according to the different ſituation of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon ofre, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the ſame name, diſtinguiſhed by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibſon's Camden.

O'VER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; ofre, Sax.]

1. Above, with reſpect to excellence or dignity.

How happy ſome, o'er other ſome can be!
Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as ſhe.
Shakſpeare.

Young Pallas ſhone conſpicuous o'er the reſt;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his veſt. Dryden.

High, over all, was your great conduct ſhown,
You fought our ſafety, but forgot your own.
Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over moſt commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by ſhewing the advantages which the Chriſtian world has over the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority: oppoſed to under.

The church has over her biſhops, able to ſilence the factious, no leſs by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourſelf are the fitteſt to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place: oppoſed to below.

He was more than over ſhoes in love. Shakſp.

The ſtreet ſhould ſee as ſhe walks over head.
Shakſpeare.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whoſe heads thoſe arrows fly,
Of ſad diſtruſt and jealouſy. Waller.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in consort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,
Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shakesp.

Let them argue over all the topicks of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakesp.

Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer: as, his physicians have given him over; his friends who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste. Shakspeare.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham.

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind. Decay of Piety.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon, Wiseman.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unseasonable application of over-cold medicaments. Wiseman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare,
They spoil their business with an over-care:
And he who servilely creeps after sense,
Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erfeeds
His cramm'd desires, with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'erfill'd before. Dryden.

As they are likely to over-flow with their own ale, their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortsightedness. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another of cases and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity: and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments. Locke.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you over-burn not the turf: it rarely to be burnt so as may make it break. Mortimer.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, till the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby inactivate and grow tired of a particular subject. Watts.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea effaces another. An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful. Watts.

To OVERABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both mistake
Fitting congenial place, to rich the soil,
So much does fruitous moisture o'er-abound. Phil.

The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented. Pope.

To OVERACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act when you should understand:
A little call yourself again, and think. Ben Jonson.

Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship. Stillingfleet.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion, by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed. Atterbury.

To OVERA'RCH. v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVERA'WE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superiour influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, o'er-aw'd
His malice. Milton.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addison's Guardian.

A thousand fears
Still over-awe when she appears. Granville.

To OVERBA'LANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balancings of any factions. King Charles.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money. Locke.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.

OVERBA'LANCE. n. s. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encreate the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty overbalance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the overbalance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief. Locke.

OVERBA'TTLED. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trash.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth Hooker

To OVERBE'AR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he be himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the less? Hooker

My desire
All corrupt impediments would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspeare.

The ocean o'erspecting of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Lucius, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakspeare.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear. Shakspeare.

Glo'ster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-born by thee. Shakspeare.

The Turkish commander, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-born the christians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war. Bacon.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent. Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water. L'Estrange.

Crowding on the last the first impel,
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell. Dryd.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanville's Scepsis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty. Addison.

To OVERBI'D. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

To OVERBLO'W. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustring storm is over-blown. Spenser.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain. Spenser.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakspeare.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are over-blown. Dryden.

To OVERBLO'W. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known. Waller.

OVERBO'ARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again, and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Howel.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board. South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he seiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superiour force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board. Arbuthnot.

To OVERBU'LK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakspeare.

To OVERBU'RDEN. v. a. [over and burden.] To load with too great weight.

If she were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBU'Y. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who flights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies. Dryden.

To OVERCA'RRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVERCA'ST. v. a. part. overcast. [over and cast.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they past,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Spenser.

Hie, Robin, over-cast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shakf.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh.

I of fumes, and humid vapours made,
No cloud in to serene a mantion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind. Waller.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcasteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast. Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his accompt of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon.

To OVERCHA'RGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants. Pope.

3. To burden.

He whispers to his pillow
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakspeare.

4. To rate too high.

Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
O'er-charging your free purses with large fines. Shakspeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; she will recover. Shakspeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid, in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addison.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks. Shakspeare.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charg'd, breaks, misses, or recoils. Denham.

To OVERCLO'UD. v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The silver empress of the night,
O'er-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickel.

To OVERCLO'Y. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A scum of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whose their o'er-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shaksp.

To OVERCO'ME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Transform'd to fish, for their bold surquedry. Spenf.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been. Spenf.

Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. 2 Peter.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.

Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. Law.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

Th'unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakspeare.

To OVERCOME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Romans.

OVERCO'MER. n. s. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

To OVERCOU'NT. v. a. [over and count.] To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much
We do o'er-count thee. Shakspeare.

To OVERCO'VER. v. a. [over and cover.] To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel house,
O'er cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless skulls. Shakspeare.

To OVERCRO'W. v. a. [over and crow.] To crow as in triumph.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beginneth now to over crow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all our laws. Spenser.

To OVERDO'. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing so over-done is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirrour up to nature. Shakspeare.

Nature so intent upon finishing her work, much oftener over-does than under-does. You shall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none. Grew.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To OVERDRE'SS. v. a. [over and dress.] To adorn luxuriously.

In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVERDRI'VE. v. a. [over and drive.] To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young, if men should over-drive one day, all will die. Genesis.

To OVERE'YE. v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To superintend.

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties,
Lest over-eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakspeare.

To OVERE'MPTY. v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses. Carew.

O'VERFAL. n. s. [over and fall.] Cataract.

Toſtatus addeth, that thoſe which dwell near thoſe falls of waters are deaf from their infancy, like thoſe that dwell near the over-falls of Nilus. Raleigh.

To OVERFLO'AT. v. n. [over and float.] To ſwim; to float.

The town is fill'd with ſlaughter, and o'er-floats,
With a red deluge, their increaſing moats. Dryden.

To OVERFLO'W. v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our ſtrong walls ſecure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow. Dryden.

Had I the ſame conſciouſneſs that I ſaw Noah's flood, as that I ſaw the over-flowing of the Thames laſt winter, I could not doubt, that I who ſaw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the ſame ſelf. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the Author of all we enjoy, but ſuch as an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVERFLO'W. v. a.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppoſe thy ſelf as great a ſadneſs as ever did load thy ſpirit, would'ſt thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert ſure that ſome excellent fortune would relieve and recompenſe thee ſo as to over-flow all thy hopes? Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the ſummer over-flows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to overrun; to overpower.

The Scythians, at ſuch time as the northern nations over-flowed all chriſtendom, came down to the ſea-coaſt. Spenſer.

Clamus over-flow'd th' unhappy coaſt. Dryden.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? And are not the countries to over-flown ſtill ſituate between the tropicks? Bentley.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and deſtroyed in a deluge of water, that overſpread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from eaſt to weſt. Burnet.

Thus oft by mariners are ſhewn,
Earl Godwin's caſtles over-flown. Swift.

OVERFLOW. n. ſ. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulneſs; ſuch a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?—
—In great meaſure.—
—A kind over-flow of kindneſs. Shakſpeare.

Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the ſummer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abſtruſe writings: ſo that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epiſtles have, with many, paſſed for diſjointed pious diſcourſes, full of warmth and zeal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, ſtrong, coherent reaſonings all through. Locke.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a meaſuration. Arbuthnot.

The expreſſion may be aſcribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general diſpoſition of Ulyſſes. Broome.

OVERFLO'WING. n. ſ. [from overflow.] Exuberance; copiouſneſs.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowings of their fancy that way. Denham.

When the over-flowings of ungodlineſs make us afraid, the miniſters of religion cannot better diſcharge their duty than by oppoſing it. Rogers.

OVERFLO'WINGLY. adv. [from overflowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. Not elegant nor in uſe.

Nor was it his gladneſs that forced him to make the world; but his goodneſs preſſed him to impart the goods which he ſo over-flowingly abounds with. Boyle.

To OVERFLY'. v. a. [over and fly.] To cloſe by flight.

A falling kite
Can ſcarce o'er-fly them in a day and night.
Dryden.

OVERFO'RWARDNESS. n. ſ. [over and forwardneſs.] Too great quickneſs; too great readineſs.

By an over-forwardneſs in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cauſe, it often happens that cauſes are not determined according to their merits. Hale.

To OVERFRE'IGHT. v. a. pret. overfreighted; part. overfraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, ſunk. Carew.

Grief, that does not ſpeak,
Whiſpers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.
Shakſpeare.

Sorrow has ſo o'er-fraught
This ſinking barque, I ſhall not live to ſhew
How I abhor my firſt raſh crime. Denham.

To OVERGE'T. v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With ſix hours hard riding, through ſo wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horſe ſometimes, than of myſelf, ſo rightly to hit the way, I over-got them a little before night. Sidney.

To OVERGLA'NCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look haſtily over.

I have, but with a curſory eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles Shakſpear.

His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home. Dryden.

To OVERLA'DE. v. a. [over and lade.] To overburden.

Thus to throng and over-lade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear
Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may descry
The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLA'RGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Collier.

OVERLA'SHINGLY. adv. [over and lash.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Brerewood.

To OVERLA'Y. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-layeth the commons too much. Tusser.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and opprest, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries. Hooker.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others. Raleigh.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other. Ben Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.

The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid. Dryden.

The new-born babes by nurses over-laid. Dryden.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds. South.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer, over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot. Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies, though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addison.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books. Swift.

Overoffi'cious. adj. [over and officious.] Too buſy; too importunate.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; ſo that if he looks about him, he muſt take notice of it. Collier.

To Overpa'ss. v. a. [over and paſs.]

1. To croſs.

I ſtood on a wide river's bank,
Which I muſt needs o'er-paſs,
When on a ſudden Torriſmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryd.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtes done,
When theſe they over-paſs, and thoſe they ſhun?
Dryden.

2. To overlook; to paſs with diſregard.

The complaint about pſalms and hymns might as well be over-paſt without any anſwer, as it is without any cauſe brought forth. Hooker.

I read the ſatire thou entitleſt firſt,
And laid aſide the reſt, and over-paſt,
And ſwore, I thought the writer was accurſt,
That his firſt ſatire had not been his laſt. Harring.

Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the eaſt
He ſlightly view'd, and ſlightly over-paſs'd. Milton.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progreſſion demonſtrates how faſt mankind would increaſe, over-paſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from ſeventy to ſixty thouſand able men. Raleigh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to compriſe.

If the grace of him who overſeeth over-paſs

ſome, ſo that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteouſneſs. Hooker.

Overpa'st. part. adj. [from overpaſs.] Gone; paſt.

What can'ſt thou ſwear by now?—
—By time to come—
That thou haſt wronged in the time o'er paſt.
Shakſpeare.

To Overpa'y. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

Take this purſe of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakſpeare.

You have yourſelf your kindneſs over-paid,
He ceaſes to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.

Wilt thou with pleaſure hear thy lover's ſtrains,
And with one heav'nly touch o'er-pay his pains?
Prior.

To Overpe'rch. v. a. [over and perch.] To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch theſe walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shakſpeare.

To Overpe'er. v. a. [over and peer.] To overlook; to hover above. Out of uſe.

The ocean over-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakſpeare's Hamlet.

Your argoſies with portly ſail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curt'ſy to them, do them reverence. Shakſp.

Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to over-peer. Shakſpeare.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's hedge,
Whoſe top branch over-peer'd Jove's ſpreading tree,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'rful wind.
Shakſpeare.

They are invincible by reaſon of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and ſlender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandys.

O'verplus. n. ſ. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than ſufficient.

Some other ſinners there are, from which that overplus of ſtrength in perſuaſion doth ariſe. Hooker.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained ſtill in the mortar. L'Eſtrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addiſon.

To Overply'. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriouſly.

What ſupports me, doſt thou aſk?
The conſcience, friend, t' have loſt them over-ply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poems.

To Overpoi'se. v. a. [over and poiſe.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have loſt their thighs will float, their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-poiſed by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown.

The ſcale
O'er-pois'd by darkneſs, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the ſummer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is loſt in night. Creech.

Overpo'ise. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his firſt and ſecond book of odes, was ſtill riſing, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over-poiſe to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he deſcended in his fourth by ſlow degrees. Dryden.

Some over-poiſe of ſway by turns they ſhare,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryd.

To Overpo'wer. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppreſs by ſuperiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Milton.

As much light over-powers the eye, ſo they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with ſnow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reaſon allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be ſurpaſſed nor over-powered. South.

After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf outwitted by Cæſar, he broke with him, over-powered him in the ſenate, and cauſed many unjuſt decrees to paſs againſt him. Dryden.

The Iſraelites paſs the mountains the ſtandards of the riſe of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been ſtanding when it did ſo riſe and over-power the earth. Woodward.

Inſpiration is, when ſuch an over-powering impreſſion and ſuppoſition is made upon the mind by God himſelf, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it.
Watts' Logick.

To Overpre'ss. v. a. [over and preſs.] To bear upon with irreſiſtible force; to overwhelm; to cruſh.

To Overra'te. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While vain flows and ſcenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,—— ——
That as a fire the former houſe o'erthrow,
Machines and tempeſts will deſtroy the new. Dryd.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniencies of our ſtation, and in eſtimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our deſires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our deſires. Rogers.

To Overre'ach. v. a. [over and reach.]

1. To riſe above.

The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas, over-reach and ſurmount all winds and clouds
Raleigh.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in ſuch excels, that the floods over-reached the tops of the higheſt mountains. Burnet.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A fugacious man is ſaid to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he ſee himſelf able by hand to over-reach, or by power to overbear the laws whereunto he ſhould be ſubject?
Hooker.

I have laid my brain in the ſun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſs over-reaching. Shakſpeare.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmoſt vigour raiſe, and rais'd unite. Milt.

A man who had been matchleſs held
In cunning, over-reach'd where leaſt he thought,
To ſave his credit, and for very ſpight
Still will be tempting him who foils him ſtill. Milt.

There is no pleaſanter encounter than a trial of ſkill betwixt ſharpers to over-reach one another.
L'Eſtrange.

Forbidding oppreſſion, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiouſneſs and treachery.
Tillotſon.

We may no more ſue for them than we can tell a lie, or ſwear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cauſe, or be guilty of any other tranſgreſſion.
Kettleworth.

Such a principle is ambition, or a deſire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable courſe of action. Addiſon.

John had got an impreſſion that Lewis was ſo deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himſelf alone with him; at laſt he took heart of grace, let him come up, quoth he, it is but ſticking to my point, and he can never over-reach me. Hiſtory of John Bull.

To OVERREACH. v. n. A horſe is ſaid to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forward, and ſtrikes his toes againſt his fore-ſhoes. Farrier's Dict.

OVERREACHER. n. ſ. [from overreach.] A cheat; a deceiver.

Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shakſpeare.

To OVER-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load?
Shakſpeare.

To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roaſt.] To roaſt too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And Bettet twere, that both of us did faſt,
Since of ourſelves, ourſelves are choleriek,
Than feed us with ſuch over-roaſted fleſh Shakſp.

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be ſuperiour in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I ſtrave againſt it. Sidney.

That which the church by her eccleſiaſtical authority ſhall probably think and deſire to be true or good, muſt in congruity of reaſon over-rule all other inferior arguments whatſoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable reſolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all poſſibility of ſociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be ſuch as will be over-ruled with ſome one, whom they dare not diſpleaſe? Whitgift.

His paſſion and animoſity over-ruled his conſcience. Clarendon.

A wiſe man ſhall over-rule his ſtars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the conſtellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.

He is acted by a paſſion which abſolutely over-rules him, and ſo can no more recover himſelf, than a bowl rolling down an hill ſtop itſelf in the midſt of its career. South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unleſs where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulſe of conſcience and duty. L'Eſtrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling intereſt, be inclined to luſt, and yet by the force of reaſon overcome that bad influence. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to ſuperintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-rule, as in other matters he is accuſtomed? Hayward.

3. To ſuperſede: as, in law, to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornih acre, and four Cornith acres a knight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or leſſer quantity, according to the fruitfulneſs or barrenneſs of the ſoil. Carew.

To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To harraſs by incurſions; to ravage; to rove over in a hoſtile manner.

Till the tears ſhe ſhed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the faireſt creature in the world. Shakſ.

They err, who count it glorious to ſubdue
By conqueſt far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win,
Great cities by aſſault. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The nine
Their fainting foes to ſhameful flight compell'd,
And with relentleſs force o'er-run the field. Dryden.

Guſtavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run moſt of the reſt. Addiſon.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad conſequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift.

2. To outrun; to paſs behind.

Pyrocles being come to ſixteen, over-run his age in growth, ſtrength, and all things following it, that not Muſidorus could perform any action on horſe or foot more ſtrongly, or deliver that ſtrength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuouſly. Sidney.

We may out-run
By violent ſwiftneſs, that which we run at,
And loſe by over-running. Shakſpeare.

Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuſhi. 2 Samuel.

Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faſter than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he ſuppoſeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cauſe of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; becauſe the earth over-runneth the water. Bacon.

3. To overſpread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nahum.

This diſpoſition of the parts of the earth, ſhews us the foot-ſteps of ſome kind of ruin which happened in ſuch a way, that at the ſame time a general flood of waters would neceſſarily over-run the whole earth Burnet.

His tears defac'd the ſurface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears.
Addiſon.

4. To miſchief by great numbers; to peſter.

To flatter fooliſh men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the ſame with betraying people into an opinion that they are in a virtuous and happy ſtate, when they are over-run with paſſion, and drowned in their luſts. L'Eſtrange.

Were it not for the inceſſant labours of this induſtrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addiſon.

Such proviſion made, that a country ſhould not want ſprings as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing elſe; but a ſupply every where ſuitable to the neceſſities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw.

Base, barbarous man, the more we raise our love,
The more we pall, and cool, and kill his ardour
Dryden.

3. To weaken; to impair.

For thy,
I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more. Shakf.

4. To cloy.

Palled appetite is humourous, and must be gratified with sauces rather than food. Tatler

PA'LLET. n. s. [paillet, in Chaucer; which was probably the French word from paille, straw, and secondarily, a bed.]

1. A small bed; a mean bed.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoaky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp.

His secretary was laid in a pallet near him for ventilation of his thoughts. Wotton.

If your stray attendance be yet lodg'd,
Or if a roof within these limits, I shall know,
Ere morrow wake, or the low-roosted lark
From her thatch pallet rouse. Milton.

2. [palette, Fr.] A small measure, formerly used by chirurgeons.

A surgeon drew from a patient in four days, twenty-seven pallets, every pallet containing three ounces. Hakewill.

3. To cure imperfectly or temporally, not radically; to ease, not cure.

PALLIA'TION. n. s. [palliation, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuation; alleviation; favourable representation.

I saw clearly through all the pious disguises and fair palliations of some men. King Charles.

Such bitter invectives against other men's faults, and indulgence or palliation of their own, shews their zeal lies in their spleen. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. Imperfect or temporary, not radical cure; mitigation, not cure.

If the just cure of a disease be full of peril, let the physician retort to palliation. Bacon.

PA'LLIATIVE. adj. [palliatif, Fr. from palliate.]

1. Extenuating; favourably representative.
2. Mitigating, not removing; temporarily or partially, not radically curative.

Consumption pulmonary seldom admits of other than a palliative cure, and is generally incurable when hereditary. Arbuthnot.

PA'LLIATIVE. n. f. [from palliate.] Something mitigating, something alleviating.

It were more safe to trust to the general aversion of our people against this coin, than apply those palliatives which weak, perfidious, or abject politicians administer. Swift.

PA'LLID. adj. [pallidus, Lat.] Pale; not highcoloured; not bright. pallid is seldom used of the face.

Of every sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gather'd some; the violet pallid blue Spenser.
When from the pallid sky the sun descends.
Thomson.

Whilst, on the margin of the beaten road,
Its pallid bloom sick-nuelling hen-bane shews. Harte.

PALM. n. f. [palma, Lat. palmier, Fr.]

1. A tree of great variety of species; of which the branches were worn in token of victory: it therefore implies superiority.

There are twenty-one species of this tree, of which the most remarkable are, the greater palm or date-tree. The dwarf palm grows in Spain, Portugal, and Italy, from whence the leaves are sent hither and made into flag-brooms. The oily palm is a native of Guinea and Cape Verd island, but has been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbadoes. It grows as high as the main mast of a ship. Miller.

Get the start of the majestick world,
And bear the palm alone. Shakspeare.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil, than the abundant growing of the palm-trees without labour of man. This tree alone giveth unto man whatsoever his life beggeth at nature's hand. Raleigh.

Above others who carry away the palm for excellence, is Maurice landgrave of Hess. Peacham.

Fruits of palm-tree, pleasantest to thirst
And hunger both. Milton.

Thou youngest virgin, daughter of the skies,
Whose palms new pluck'd from paradise,
With spreading branches more publickly wave.
Dryden.

2. Victory; triumph. [palme, Fr.]

Namur subdu'd is England's palm alone;
The rest behegʼd, but we construm'd the town.
Dryden.

3. The hand spread out; the inner part of the hand. [palma, Lat.]

By this virgin palm now kissing thine,
I will be thine. Shakspeare.

Drinks of extreme thin parts fretting, put upon the back of your hand, will, with a little stay, pass through to the palm, and yet taste mild to the mouth. Bacon.

Seeking my success in love to know,
I try'd th' infallible prophetick way,
A poppy leaf upon my palm to lay. Dryden.

4. A hand, or measure of length, comprising three inches. [palme, French.]

The length of a foot is a sixth part of the stature, a span one eighth of it; a palm or hand's breadth one twenty fourth, a thumb's breadth or inch one seventy-second, a forefinger's breadth one ninety-sixth. Holder on Time.

Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. of France, and Charles V. emperor, were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

The same hand into a fist may close,
Which instantly a palm expanded shows. Denham.

To PALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To conceal in the palm of the hand, as jugglers.

Palming is held foul play amongst gamesters.
Dryden.

They palm'd the trick that lost the game. Prior.

2. To impose by fraud.

It must by scriptures, how can we be sure,
Reply'd the panther, what tradition's pure?
For you may palm upon us new for old. Dryden.

Moll White has made the country ring with several imaginary exploits palmed upon her. Spectator.

3. To handle.

Frank carves very ill, yet will palm all the meat.
Prior.

4. To stroak with the hand. Ainsworth.

PA'LMER. n. f. [from palm.] A pilgrim: they who returned from the holy land carried branches of palm.

My sceptre, for a palmer's walking staff, Shakip.
Behold yon isle, by palmers, pilgrims trod,
Men bearded, bald, cowl'd, uncowl'd, shod, unshod.
Pope.

PA'LMERWORM. n. f. [palmer and worm.] A worm covered with hair, supposed to be so called because he wanders over all plants.

A flesh fly, and one of those hairy worms that resemble caterpillars and are called palmer-worms, being conveyed into one of our small receivers, the bee and the fly lay with their bellies upward, and the worm seemed suddenly struck dead. Boyle.

PALME'TTO. n. f. A species of the palm-tree: it grows in the West Indies to be a very large tree; with the leaves the inhabitants thatch their houses. These leaves, before they are expanded, are cut and brought into England to make women's plaited hats; and the berries of these trees were formerly much used for buttons.

Broad o'er my head the verdant cedars wave,
And high palmettos lift their graceful shade. Thomson.

PALMI'FEROUS. adj. [palma and fero, Latin.] Bearing palms. Dict.

PA'LMIPEDE. adj. [palma and pes, Latin.] Webfooted; having the toes joined by a membrane.

PA'LMISTRY. n. f. [palma, Latin.]

1. The cheat of foretelling fortune by the lines of the palm.

We shall not query what truth is in palmistry, or divination from lines of our hands of high denomination. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Here wildly his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He topples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

With the fond maids in palmistry he deals;
They tell the secret first which he reveals. Prior.

2. Addison uses it humorously for the action of the hand.

Going to relieve a common beggar, he found his pocket was picked; that being a kind of palmistry at which this vermin are very dextrous. Spectator.

PA'LMY. adj. [from palm.] Bearing palms.

In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless. Shakspeare.

She pass'd the region which Panchaia join'd,

PALPABI'LITY. n. f. [from palpable.] Quality of being perceivable to the touch.

He first found out palpability of colours; and by the delicacy of his touch, could distinguish the different vibrations of the heterogeneous rays of light. Mart. Scribierus.

PA'LPABLE. adj. [palpable, Fr. palpor, Latin.]

1. Perceptible by the touch.

Art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation?
I see thee yet in form as palpable,
As this which now I draw. Shakspeare.

Darkness must overshadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness! and blot out three days. Milton.

2. Gross; coarse; easily detected.

That grosser kind of heathenish idolatry, whereby they worshipped the very works of their own hands, was an absurdity to reason so palpable, that the prophet David comparing idols and idolaters together, maketh almost no odds between them. Hooker.

They grant we err not in palpable manner, we are not openly and notoriously impious. Hooker.

He must not think to shelter himself from so palpable an absurdity, by this impertinent distinction. Tillotson.

Having no surer guide, it was no wonder that they fell into gross and palpable mistakes. Woodward.

3. Plain; easily perceptible.

That they all have so testified, I see not how we should possibly with a proof more palpable, than this manifestly received and every where continued custom of reading them publickly. Hooker.

They would no longer be content with the invisible monarchy of God, and God dismissed them to the palpable dominion of Saul. Holyday.

Since there is so much dissimilitude between cause and effect in the more palpable phænomena, we can expect no less between them and their invisible efficients. Glanville.

PA'LPABLENESS. n. f. [from palpable.] Quality of being palpable; plainness; grossness.

PA'LPABLY. adv. [from palpable.]

1. In such a manner as to be perceived by the touch.
2. Grossly; plainly.

Hath for your love as great a pang of heart,
As you have for Olivia. Shakspeare.

See how the pangs of death do make him grin. Shakspeare.

Suff'rance made
Almost each pang a death. Shakspeare.

Earth trembled from her entrails, as again,
In pangs, and nature gave a second groan. Milton.

Juno pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

My son advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance,
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry. Dryd.

I will give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair. Addison.

I saw the hoary traitor
Grin in the pangs of death, and bite the ground. Add.

Ah! come not, write not, think not once of me,
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee. Pope.

To PANG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment cruelly.

If fortune divorce
It from the bearer; 'tis a suff'rance panging,
As soul, and body's parting. Shakspeare.

I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her,

PARALLELO'PIPED. n. f. [parallelopipede, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they compos'd a parallelopiped. Newton.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cube or parallelopiped figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παραλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism, not admittible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to usher it. Brown.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, otherwise equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the false words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbuthnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument: if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that the fact needs be so, is perhaps below paralogy to affirm. Brown.

PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralysie, Fr.] A palsy.

PARALY'TICAL. } adj. [from paralysis;
PARALY'TICK. } paralytique, French.] Palsied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair,
Angelic, fofteſt work of Heav'n, draws near
To the cold shaking paralytick hand,
Senseless of beauty. Prior

If a nerve be cut, or straightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion: which is the case of paralyticks. Dechan.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytical disposition of the parts. Arbuthnot.

PARA'METER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa; but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMO'UNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction: as, lord paramount, the chief of the seigniory: with to.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or demons, could not question their being inspired by God. Hyde.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount, and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PA'RAPHRASE. n. f. [παραφρασις; paraphraſe, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphraſe upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South.

In paraphraſe, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not to strictly follow'd as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

To PA'RAPHRASE. v. n. [paraphraſer, Fr. παραφραζω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to confine and paraphraſe our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and malice of our adversaries. Stillingfleet.

What needs he paraphraſe on what we mean?
We were at worst but wanton, he's obscene. Dryden.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphraſe.—But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphraſing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Felton.

PA'RAPHRAST. n. f. [paraphraſte, French; παραφραστης.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The writers for public audience are such as following a middle course between the rigour of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasts, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hooker.

The Chaldean paraphrast renders Gerah by Meath. Arbuthnot.

PARAPHRA'STICAL. } adj. [from para-
PARAPHRA'STICK. } phraſe.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENI'TIS. n. f. [παρα and φρενιτις; paraphrenaſie, Fr.]

PARAQUE'TO. n. f. A little parrot.

PA'RASANG. n. f. [parasanga, low Latin.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory, as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs. Locke.

PA'RASITE. n. f. [paraſite, Fr. paraſita, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

Here's a flatterer,
A paraſite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which falsie hopes linger. Shakſpeare.

Most fawning, smooth, detested paraſites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakſpeare.

Diogenes, when nice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see that even Diogenes nourisheth paraſites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning paraſite, obey'd;
Then to thyself ascrib'st the truth foretold. Milton.

The people sweat not for their king's delight,
T' enrich a pimp, or raise a paraſite. Dryden.

PARASI'TICAL. } adj. [paraſitique, French;
PARASI'TICK. } from paraſite.] Flattering; wheedling.

The bishop received small thanks for his paraſitick presentation. Hakewill.

PARCEL. n. f. [parcelle, Fr. particula, Latin.]

1. A ſmall bundle.
2. A part of the whole; part taken ſeparately.

Women, Silvius, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him. Shakſpeare.
I drew from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would at my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively. Shakſpeare.

An inventory thus importing,
The ſeveral parcels of his plate, his treaſure,
Rich ſtuffs and ornaments of houſhold. Shakſpeare.

With what face could ſuch a great man have begged ſuch a parcel of the crown lands, one a caſtle or money, another the forfeited eſtate? Dancomt.

I have known penſions given to particular perſons, any one of which, if divided into ſmaller parcels, and diſtributed to thoſe who diſtinguiſh themſelves by wit or learning, would anſwer the end. Swift.

The ſame experiments ſucceed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows ſomewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot.

3. A quantity or maſs.

What can be rationally conceived in ſo tranſparent a ſubſtance as water for the production of thoſe colours, beſides the various ſizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newton.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors ſtand at my beſtowing Shakſp.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this concluſion, that unleſs they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Eſtrange.

To PA'RCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out ſeveral perfections to ſeveral deities, do they not, by this, allert contradictions, making deity only to ſuch a meaſure perfect? whereas deity implies perfection beyond all meaſure South.

Thoſe ghoſtly kings would parcel out my pow'r,
And all the fatneſs of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a maſs.

What a wounding ſhame, that mine own ſervant ſhould parcel the ſum of my diſgraces by addition of his envy! Shakſpeare.

PA'RCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies poſſeſſed of an eſtate, and having iſſue only daughters, or his ſiſters be his heirs; ſo that the lands deſcend to thoſe daughters or ſiſters: theſe are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Dict.

PA'RCENARY. n. f. [from parſonier, Fr.] A holding or occupying of land by more perſons pro indiviſo, or by joint tenants, otherwiſe called coparceners: for if they refuſe to divide their common inheritance, and chuſe rather to hold it jointly, they are ſaid to hold in parcinaria. Cowell.

To PARCH. v. a. [from πιρκάω, ſays Junius; from percoquo, ſays Skinner; neither of them ſeem ſatisfied with their conjecture. perhaps from peruſtus, burnt, to peruſt, to parch; perhaps from parchment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almoſt proverbial.] To burn ſlightly and ſuperficially; to ſcorch; to dry.

Hath thy fiery heart ſo parcht thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shakſpeare.
Did he ſo often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and ſummer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shakſpeare.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton
I'm empty'd with ſorrow, paſt relief
Of tears, parch'd up and wither'd with my grief.
Dryden

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemiſphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkneſs, the other continually roaſted and parched by the ſun beams. Ray.

The ſyrian ſtar
With his ſultry breath infects the ſky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heav'ns above us fry. Dryden

Full fifty years
I have indur'd the biting winter's blaſt,
And the ſeverer heats of parching ſummer. Rowe.
The ſkin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.
A man diſtreſſed with thirſt in the parched places of the wilderneſs, ſearches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

To PARCH. v. n. To be ſcorched.

We were better parch in Afric ſun,
Than in the pride and fat'ning of his eyes. Shakſp.
If to prevent the acroſpiring, it be thrown thin, many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortimer.

PA'RCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, Fr. pergamena, Lat.] Skins dreſſed for the writer. Among traders, the ſkins of ſheep are called parchment, thoſe of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the ſkin of an innocent lamb ſhould be made parchment; that parchment, being ſcribbled o'er, ſhould undo a man? Shakſpeare.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as freſh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying ſhades before the clouds we ſhew,
We ſhrink like parchment in conſuming flame.
Dryden.

PA'RCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dreſſes parchment.

PARD, } n. f. [pardus, pardalis, Lat.]
PA'RDALE. } The leopard; in poetry, any of the ſpotted beaſts.

The pardale ſwift, and the tyger cruel. Spenſer.
As fox to lambs, as wolf to heifer's calf;
As pard to the hind, or ſtep-dame to her ſon. Shak.
Ten brace of grey-hounds, ſhowy fair,
And tall as ſtags, ran looſe, and cours'd around his chair,
A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

That thou may'ſt ſee the diff'rence of our ſpirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou aſk it. Shakſp.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or ſlight apology.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakſpeare.

PA'RDON. n. f. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveneſs of an offender.
2. Forgiveneſs of a crime.

He that pleaſeth great men, ſhall get pardon for iniquity. Eccleſiaſticus.
A ſlight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with ſome pardon among my friends. Wotton.
But mine in pardon is my judge. Milton.
What better can we do than proſtrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confeſs
Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Wat'ring the ground? Milton.
There might you ſee
Indulgences, diſpenſes, pardons, bulls,
The ſport of winds. Milton.

3. Remiſſion of penalty.
4. Forgiveneſs received.

A man may be ſafe as to his condition, but, is the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehenſions: ſecure in his pardon, but miſerable in the ignorance of it, and to paſſing all his days in the diſconſolate, uncertain vicitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South.

5. Warrant of forgiveneſs, or exemption from puniſhment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never ſee his pardon. Shakſpeare

This is his pardon, purchaſ'd by ſuch ſin,
For which the pardoner himſelf is in. Shakſpeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgences, and ſold them to ſuch as would buy them, againſt whom Luther incenſed the people of Germany. Cowell.

To PARE. v. a. [This word is reaſonably deduced by Skinner from the French phraſe, parer les ongles, to dreſs the horſes hoofs when they are flayed by the farrier: thus we firſt ſaid, pare your nails; and from this tranſferred the word to general uſe.] To cut off extremities of the ſurface; to cut away by little and little; to diminiſh. If pare be uſed before the thing diminiſhed, it is followed immediately by its acculative; if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the paſſive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle: as, away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we clog God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakspeare.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd,
'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakspeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakspeare.

The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convict should be burned in the hand. Bacon.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is sinful, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.

'Twere well if he would pare her nails. Pope.

2. Maintained by the parish.

The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.

PARI'SHIONER. n. s. [paroissien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.

I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you. Shakspeare.

Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
All the air is thy diocese;
And all the chirping chorist'ers
And other birds are thy parishioners. Donne.

In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, through neglect, do perish. Graunt.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison.

PA'RITOR. n. s. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritours; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryd.

PA'RITY. n. s. [parité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain fancied parity of sins. Hall.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. King Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of numeration; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown.

Those accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he con-verſes with only by imperfect ſpeculations, by the diſcourſes of reaſon, or the diſcoveries of faith? South.

PARK. n. ſ. [peappuc, Sax. parc, French.] A peice of ground encloſed and ſtored with wild beaſts of chaſe, which a man may have by preſcription or the king's grant.

Manwood, in his foreſt-law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beaſts of venery, and alſo for other wild beaſts that are beaſts of the foreſt and of the chaſe: and thoſe wild beaſts are to have a firm peace and protection there, ſo that no man may hurt or chaſe them within the park, without licenſe of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chaſe or a warren, for a park muſt be incloſed, and may not be open; if it does, it is a good cauſe of ſeizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action againſt ſuch as hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowell.

We have parks and incloſures of all ſorts of beaſts and birds, which we uſe not only for view or rareneſs but likewiſe for diſtillations and trials. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To encloſe as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Mar'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakſp.

PA'RKER. n. ſ. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainſworth.

PA'RKLEAVES. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

PARLE. n. ſ. [from parler, Fr.] Converſation; talk; oral treaty; oral diſcuſſion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthieſt love? Shakſp.
Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shak.
The biſhop, by a parle, is, with a ſhow
Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.
Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the juſtice of our cauſe with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we muſt meet,
Give me my arms. Rowe.

To PA'RLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to diſcuſs any thing orally. It is much uſed in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk deſired the captain to ſend ſome, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Knolles.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining ſhe would adviſe him to proceed. Broome.

PA'RLEY. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; diſcuſſion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the ſword. Sidney.
Well, by my will, we ſhall admit no parley;
A rotten caſe abides no handling. Shakſpeare.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shak.
Let us reſolve never to have any parley with our luſts, but to make ſome conſiderable progreſs in our repentance. Calamy.
Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the moſt trivial things, he pronounced as treaſon to ourſelves, as well as unto God. Fell.
No gentle means could be eſſay'd;
'Twas beyond parley when the ſiege was laid. Dryd.
Force never yet a generous heart did gain;
We yield on parley, but are ſtorm'd in vain. Dryd.
Yet when ſome better ſuited youth
Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,
Reflect one moment on his truth,
Who, dying thus, perſiſts to love thee. Prior.

PA'RLIAMENT. n. ſ. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, Fr.] In England, is the aſſembly of the king and three eſtates of the realm; namely, the lords ſpiritual, the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, eſpecially the making and correcting of laws; which aſſembly or court is, of all others, the higheſt, and of greateſt authority. Cowell.

The king is fled to London,
To call a preſent court of parliament. Shakſpeare.
Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,
To make a ſhambles of the parliament houſe. Shakſ.
The true uſe of parliaments is very excellent; and be often called, and continued as long as is neceſſary. Bacon.
I thought the right way of parliaments the moſt ſafe for my crown, as beſt pleaſing to my people. King Charles.
Theſe are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial ſtood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAME'NTARY. adj. [from parliament.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three firſt titles of the two houſes, or lines, and conqueſt, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.
Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or conſtitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.
Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary ſecurity, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PA'RLOUR. n. ſ. [parloir, Fr. parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monaſteries, where the religious meet and converſe.
2. A room in houſes on the firſt floor, elegantly furniſhed for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing ſeemly for a man to go about the building of an houſe to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own uſe? Hooker.
Back again fair Alma led them right,
And ſoon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenſer.
It would be infinitely more ſhameful, in the diets of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.
Root and ſides were like a parlour made
A ſoft recreſs, and a cool ſummer ſhade. Dryden.
The firſt, forgive my verſe if too diffuſe,
Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's uſe;
The ſecond, better bolted and immur'd,
From wolves his out-door family ſecur'd. Harte.

PA'RLOUS. adj. [This might ſeem to come from parler, Fr. to ſpeak; but Junius derives it, I think rightly, from perilous, in which it anſwers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; ſprightly; waggiſh.

Midas dark communicate
To none but to his wife his ears of ſtate;
One muſt be truſted, and he thought her fit,
As paſſing prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

PA'RLOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from parlous.] Quickneſs; keenneſs of temper.

PARMA-CITTY. n. ſ. Corruptedly for ſperma ceti. Ainſworth.

PA'RNEL. n. ſ. [The diminutive of patronella.] A punk; a ſtat. Obſolete. Skinner.

PARO'CHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from parochia, low Lat.] Belonging to a pariſh.

The married ſtate of parochial paſtors hath given them the opportunity of ſetting a more exact and univerſal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PA'RODY. n. ſ. [parodie, Fr. παρωδία.] A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken, and by a ſlight change adapted to ſome new purpoſe.

The imitations of the ancients are added together with ſome of the parodies and alluſions to the moſt excellent of the moderns. Pope.

To PA'RODY. v. a. [parodier, French; from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

I have tranſlated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you adviſing me. Pope.

PARO'LE. n. ſ. [parole, Fr.] Word given as an aſſurance; promiſe given by a priſoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthral each other's ſoul,
Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleaveland.
Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; becauſe I have a ſcruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a priſoner to the ladies. Swift.

PARONOMA'SIA. n. ſ. [παρωνομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or ſyllable, ſeveral things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agnominatio. Dict.

PARONY'CHIA. n. ſ. [παρωνυχία; paronychie, Fr.] A preternatural ſwelling or ſore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Dict.

PARO'NYMOUS. adj. [παρώνυμος.] Reſembling another word.

Shew your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the ſynonimous and the paronymous or kindred names. Watts.

PA'ROQUET. n. ſ. [parroquet, or perroquet, Fr.] A ſmall ſpecies of parrot.

The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middle moſt, called popinjays; and the leſſer, paroquets: in all above twenty ſorts. Grew.
I would not give my paroquet
For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.

PA'ROTID. [parotide, Fr. παρωτὶς, παρὰ and οὖς.] Salivary: ſo named becauſe near the ears.

Beaſts and birds, having one common uſe of ſpittle, are furniſhed with the parotid glands, which help to ſupply the mouth with it. Grew.

PA'ROTIS. n. ſ. [πάρωτὶς] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the ſaliva of the mouth. Wiſeman.

PA'ROXYSM. n. ſ. [παροξυσμὸς; paroxyſme, Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a diſeaſe.

I fancied to myſelf a kind of cauſe, in the change of the paroxyſm. Dryden.
Amorous girls, though the fury of an hyſterick paroxyſm, are caſt into a trance for an hour. Harvey.
The greater diſtance of time there is between the paroxyſms, the fever is leſs dangerous, but more obſtinate. Arbuthnot.

PA'RRICIDE. n. ſ. [parricide, Fr. parricida, Lat. n.]

1. One who deſtroys his father.

I told him the revenging gods
'Gainſt parricides did all their thunder bend;
Spoke with how manifold and ſtrong a bond
The child was bound to th' father. Shakſpeare.

2. One who deſtroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence, as his country or patron.
3. [parricide, Fr. parricidium, Lat.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewiſe a good law-maker; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

Morat was always bloody, now he's baſe;
And has ſo far in uſurpation gone,
He will by parricide ſecure the throne. Dryden.

PARRICI'DAL. } adj. [from parricide
PARRICI'DIOUS. } Lat.] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.

He is now paid in his own way, the parricidial animal, and puniſhment of murderers is upon his Brown.

PA'RROT. n. ſ. [perroquet, Fr.] A party-coloured bird of the ſpecies of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice. See PAROQUET.

Some will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakſpeare.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try?
'Twas witty want, fierce hunger to appeaſe. Dryden.

To PA'RRY. v. n. [parer, Fr.] To put by thruſts; to fence.

A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thruſt, and not ſtand parrying, has the odds againſt a moderate fencer. Locke.

I could
By dint of logick ſtrike thee mute;
With learned ſkill, now puſh, now parry,
From Darii to Bocardo vary. Prior.

To PARSE. v. a. [from pars, Latin.] To reſolve a ſentence into the elements or parts of ſpeech. It is a word only uſed in grammar ſchools.

Let him conſtrue the letter into Engliſh, and parſe it over perfectly. Aſcham.

Let ſcholars reduce the words to their original, to the firſt caſe of nouns, or firſt tenſe of verbs, and give an account of their formations and changes, their ſyntax and dependencies, which is called parſing. Watts.

PARSIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from parſimony.] Covetous; frugal; ſparing. It is ſometimes of a good, ſometimes of a bad ſenſe.

A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parſimonious, for ſtore at home draweth not his contemplations abroad, but want ſupplieth itſelf of what is next. Bacon.

Extraordinary funds for one campaign may ſpare us the expence of many years, whereas a long parſimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addiſon.

Parſimonious age and rigid wiſdom. Rowe.

PARSIMO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from parſimonious.] Covetouſly; frugally; ſparingly.

Our anceſtors acted parſimoniouſly, becauſe they only ſpent their own treaſure for the good of their poſterity; whereas we ſquandered away the treaſures of our poſterity. Swift.

PARSIMO'NIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from parſimonious.] A diſpoſition to ſpare and ſave.

PA'RSIMONY. n. ſ. [parſimonia, Latin.] Frugality; covetouſneſs; niggardlineſs; ſaving temper.

The ways to enrich are many: parſimony is one of the beſt, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.

Theſe people, by their extreme parſimony, ſoon grow into wealth from the ſmalleſt beginnings. Swift.

PA'RSLEY. n. ſ. [perſil, Fr. apium, Latin; perſli, Welſh.] An herb.

PA'SSIBLE. adj. [passible, Fr. passibilis, Lat.] Susceptive of impressions from external agents.

Theodoret disputeth with great earnestness, that God cannot be said to suffer; but he thereby meaneth Christ's divine nature against Apollinarius, which held even deity itself passible. Hooker.

PA'SSIBLENESS. n. f. [from passible.] Quality of receiving impressions from external agents.

It drew after it the heresy of the passibleness of the deity; the deity of Christ was become, in their conceits, the same nature with the humanity that was passible. Brerewood.

PA'SSING. participial adj. [from pass.]

1. Supreme; surpassing others; eminent.

No strength of arms shall win this noble fort,
Or shake this puissant wall, such passing might
Have spells and charms if they be said aright. Fairf.

2. It is used adverbially to enforce the meaning of another word. Exceeding.

Oberon is passing fell and wroth. Shakspeare.

Passing many know it: and so many,
That of all nations there abides not any,
From where the morning rises and the sun
To where even and night their courses run! Chapm.

Many in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses
Than mortal creatures. Milton.

She was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonnair. Dryden.

Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.

PA'SSINGBELL. n. f. [passing and bell.] The bell which rings at the hour of departure, to obtain prayers for the passing soul: it is often used for the bell which rings immediately after death.

Those loving papers
Thicken on you now, as prayers ascend
To heaven in troops at a good man's passingbell. Donne.

A talk of tumult, and a breath
Would serve him as his passingbell to death. Daniel.

Before the passing bell begun,
The news through half the town has run. Swift.

PA'SSION. n. f. [passion, Fr. passio, Lat.]

1. Any effect caused by external agency.

A body at rest affords us no idea of any active power to move, and when set in motion, it is rather a passion than an action in it. Locke.

2. Susceptibility of effect from external action.

The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions, applied to the instruments men ordinarily practise. Bacon.

3. Violent commotion of the mind.

All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts and rash embrac'd despair. Shakspeare.

Thee every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep: whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admired Shakspeare.

I am doubtful, lest
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him:
If you should smile, he grows impatient Shakspeare.

In loving thou do'st well, in passion not,
Wherein true love consists not Milton.

Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime condemn'd
For ever now to have their lot in pain. Milton.

Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

All the art of rhetorick, besides order and perspicuity, only moves the passions and thereby misleads the judgment. Locke.

4. Anger.

The word passion signifies the receiving any action, in a large philosophical sense; in a more limited philosophical sense, it signifies any of the affections of human nature; as love, fear, joy, sorrow: but the common people confine it only to anger. Watts.

5. Zeal; ardour.

Where statesmen are ruled by faction and interest, they can have no passion for the glory of their country, nor any concern for the figure it will make. Addison.

6. Love.

For your love,
You kill'd her father: you confess'd you drew

A mighty argument to prove your paſſion for the daughter Dryden and Lee.

He, to grate me more,
Publickly own'd his paſſion for Ameſtris. Rowe.

Survey yourſelf, and then forgive your ſlave,
Think what a paſſion ſuch a form muſt have Granville.

PA'SSIONATE. adj. [paſſionné, Fr.]

1. Moved by paſſion; feeling or expreſſing great commotion of mind.

My whole endeavour is to reſolve the conſcience, and to ſhew what, in this controverſy, the heart is to think, if it will follow the light of ſound and ſincere judgment, without either cloud of prejudice or miſt of paſſionate affection. Hooker.

Thucydides obſerves, that men are much more paſſionate for injuſtice than for violence; becauſe the one coming as from an equal ſeems rapine, when the other proceeding from one ſtronger is but the effect of neceſſity. Clarendon

In his prayers as his attention was fixt and ſteady, ſo was it inflamed with paſſionate fervors. Fell.

Good angels looked upon this ſhip of Noah's with a paſſionate concern for its ſafety. Burnet.

Men, upon the near approach of death, have been rouzed up into ſuch a lively ſenſe of their guilt, ſuch a paſſionate degree of concern and remorſe, that, if ten thouſand ghoſts had appeared to them, they ſcarce could have had a fuller conviction of their danger. Atterbury.

2. Eaſily moved to anger.

Homer's Achilles is haughty and paſſionate, impatient of any reſtraint by laws, and arrogant in arms. Prior

To PA'SSIONATE. v. a. [from paſſion.] An old word. Obſolete.

1. To affect with pitiful regard,

Great pleaſure mix'd with pitiful regard,

Whilſt they his pitiful adventures heard,
That oft they did lament his luckleſs ſtate. Spenſer.

2. To expreſs paſſionately.

Thy niece and I want hands,
And cannot paſſionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. Shakſpeare.

PA'SSIONATELY, adv. [from paſſionate.]

1. With paſſion; with deſire, love, or hatred; with great commotion of mind.

Whoever paſſionately covets any thing he has not, has loſt his hold L'Eſtrange.

If ſorrow expreſſes itſelf never ſo loudly and paſſionately, and diſcharge itſelf in never ſo many tears, yet it will no more purge a man's heart, than the waſhing of his hands can cleanſe the rottenneſs of his bones. South.

I made Meleinda, in oppoſition to Nourmahal, a woman paſſionately loving of her huſband, patient of injuries and contempt, and conſtant in her kindneſs, Dryden.

2. Angrily.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, ſometimes paſſionately enough, to divert it from themſelves. Locke.

PA'SSIONATENESS. n. ſ. [from paſſionate.]

1. State of being ſubject to paſſion.

2. Vehemence of mind.

To love with ſome paſſionateneſs the perſon you would marry, is not only allowable but expedient. Boyle.

PA'SSIVE. adj. [paſſif, Fr. paſſivus, Lat.]

1. Receiving impreſſion from ſome external agent.

High above the ground
Their march was, and the paſſive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the paſſive reception of the will, like form cloſing with matter, grew actuate into a third and diſtinct perfection of practice. South.

As the mind is wholly paſſive in the reception of all its ſimple ideas, ſo it exerts ſeveral acts of its own, whereby, out of its ſimple ideas, the other is formed Locke.

The vis inertiæ is a paſſive principle by which bodies perſiſt in their motion or reſt, receive motion in proportion to the force impreſſing it, and reſiſt as much as they are reſiſted: by this principle alone, there never could have been any motion in the world. Newton.

2. Unreſiſting; not oppoſing.

Not thoſe alone, who paſſive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cauſe. Pope.

3. Suffering; not acting.

4. [In grammar.]

A verb paſſive is that which ſignifies paſſion or the effect of action: as doceor, I am taught. Clarke.

PA'SSIVELY. adv. [from paſſive.].

1. With a paſſive nature.

Though ſome are paſſively inclin'd,
The greater part degenerate from their kind. Dryd.

2. Without agency.

A man may not only paſſively and involuntarily be rejected, but alſo may, by an act of his own, caſt out or reject himſelf. Pearſon.

PA'SSIVENESS. n. ſ. [from paſſive.]

And ſtuck them up before the fulſome ewes. Shakſ.

2. [from piller, Fr. to rob.] To plunder. According to analogy this ſhould be written pill.

Who once juſt and temp'rate conquer'd well,
But govern ill the nations under yoke,
Peeling their provinces, exhauſted all
By luſt and rapine. Milton.

Lord-like at eaſe, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peel the chiefs, the people to devour;
Theſe, traitor, are thy talents. Dryden

PEEL. n. ſ. [pellis, Lat. pelure, Fr.] The ſkin or thin rind of any thing.

PEEL. n. ſ. [paelle, Fr.] A broad thin board with a long handle, uſed by bakers to put their bread in and out of the oven.

PEE'LER. n. ſ. [from peel.]

1. One who ſtrips or flays.

2. A robber; a plunderer.

Yet otes with her ſucking a peeler is found,
Both ill to the maſter and worſe to ſome ground.
Tuſſer.

As 'tis a peeler of land, ſow it upon lands the like rank. Mortimer.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheſſen, Dutch, to liſt up; and of Caſaubon, who derives it from ὑποπτεύω, a ſpy; perhaps it may come from pip, papio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens firſt broke the ſhell and cried, they were ſaid to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expreſſed the act of crying, was by miſtake applied to the act of appearing that was at the ſame time: this is offered till ſomething better may be found.]

1. To make the firſt appearance.

She her gay painted plumes diſordered,
Seeing at laſt herſelf from danger rid,
Peeps forth and ſoon renews her native pride. Spenſ.

Your youth
And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an unſtain'd ſhepherd. Shakſ.

England and France might through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakſpeare.

I can ſee his pride
Peep through each part of him. Shakſpeare.

The tim'rous maiden-bloſſoms on each bough
Peept forth from the firſt bluſhes; ſo that now
A thouſand ruddy hopes ſtud'd in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedy eye that ſtood. Chapman.

With words not hers, and more than human ſound,
She makes th' obedient ghoſts peep trembling through the ground. Roſcommon.

Earth, but not at once, her viſage rears,
And peeps upon the ſeas from upper grounds. Dryd.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers firſt peep'd, and trees did bloſſoms bear,
And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year.
Dryden.

Printing and letters had juſt peeped abroad in the world; and the reſtorers of learning wrote very eagerly againſt one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the ſprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open, you will find the ſprout of a greater largeneſs.
Mortimer's Huſbandry.

So pleas'd at firſt the tow'ring Alps we try,
And the firſt clouds and mountains ſeem the laſt;
But thoſe attain'd, we tremble to ſurvey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;
Th' increaſing proſpect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps ariſe. Pope.

Moſt ſouls but peep out once an age,
Dull ſullen priſ'ners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look ſlily, cloſely, or curiouſly; to look through any crevice.

Who is the ſame, which at my window peeps.
Spenſer.

Come thick night!
That my keen knife ſee not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry hold. Shakſpeare's Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd ſtrange fellows in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakſpeare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Eccleſiaſticus.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,
Dapples the walk with light and ſhade,
Like lattice windows give the ſpy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleaveland.

All doors are ſhut, no ſervant peeps abroad,
While others outward went on quick diſpatch. Dryd.

The ſtaring flames peept in, and ſaw from far
The awful ſtatues of the ſacred quire;
But ſince it was propoſ'd by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire.
Dryden.

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peep on me.
Dryden.

Thoſe remote and vaſt bodies were formed not merely to be peept at through an optick glaſs.
Bentley's Sermons.

O my muſe, juſt diſtance keep,
Thou art a maid, and muſt not peep. Prior.

In vain his little child I en peeping out
Into the mingling ſtorm, demand their ſire. Thomſ.

PEEP. n. ſ.

1. Firſt appearance: as, at the peep and firſt break of day.

2. A ſly look.

Would not one think, the almanackmaker was crept out of his grave to take t'other peep at the ſtars? Swift.

PEE'PER. n. ſ. A young chicken juſt breaking the ſhell.

Diſhes I chuſe, though little, yet genteel;
Sounds the firſt courſe, and peepers crown the meal.
Brancth.

PEE'PHOLE. } n. ſ. [peep and hole.]
PEE'PINGHOLE. } Hole through which one may look without being diſcovered.

The fox ſpied him through a peepinghole he had found out to ſee what news. L'Eſtrange.

By the peepholes on his creſt,
Is it not virtually confeſt,
That there his eyes took diſtant aim? Prior.

PEER. n. ſ. [pair, French.]

1. Equal; one of the ſame rank.

His peers upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treaſon. Shakſpeare.

Amongſt a man's peers, a man ſhall be ſure of familiarity: and therefore it is good a little to keep ſtate. Bacon.

Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him to great reſpect do'ſt bear!
That thou adorn'ſt him with to bright a mind,
Mak'ſt him a king, and ev'n an angel's peer.
Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.

All theſe did wiſe Ulyſſes lead, in counſell peer to Jove. Chapman.

In ſong he never had his peers,
From ſweet Cecilia down to chanticleer. Dryden.

3. Companion; fellow.

He all his peers in beauty did ſurpaſs. Spenſer.

If you did move to-night,
In the dances, with what ſpight
Of your peers you were beheld,
That at every motion ſwell'd. Ben Jonſon.

Who bear the bows were knights in Arthur's reign,
Twelve they, and twelve the peers of Charlemagne.
Dryden.

4. A nobleman as diſtinct from a commoner: of nobility we have five degrees, who are all nevertheleſs called peers, becauſe their eſſential privileges are the ſame.

I ſee thy complete worth with thy kingdom's peers,
Thus ſpeak my ſalutation in their minds:
Hail king of Scotland! Shakſpeare.

King Henry's peers and chief nobility
Deſtroy'd themſelves, and loſt the realm of France.
Shakſpeare.

Be juſt in all you ſay, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're ſure to be
A peer of the firſt magnitude to me. Dryden.

To PEER. v. n. [by contraction from appear.]

1. To come juſt in ſight.

As the ſun breaks through the darkeſt clouds,
So honour peereth in the meaneſt habit. Shakſpeare.

Yet many of your horſemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field. Shakſpeare.

Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I ſpy life peering. Shakſpeare

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Benſon.

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer,
Now bolt and cudgel ſquirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirrour clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himſelf makes love.
Sidney.

Hell itſelf will paſs away,
And leave her dolorous manſion to the peering day.
Milton.

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads,
And every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures. Shakſpeare.

PEE'RAGE. n. ſ. [pairie, Fr. from peer.]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendſhips he to few confin'd;
No fool, of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fain would paſs for lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower. Swift.

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force againſt paſſts, and their number is contemptible, but alſo the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament. Dryden

PEE'RDOM. n. ſ. [from peer.] Peerage.
Ainſworth.

PEE'RESS. n. ſ. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

Statеſman and patriot ply alike the ſtocks;
Peereſs and butler ſhare alike the box. Pope.

PEE'RLESS. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.

I bind,
On pain of puniſhment, the world to weet,
We ſtand up peerleſs. Shakſpeare.

Her peerleſs feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king. Shakſp.

He'perus, that led
The ſtarry hoſt, rode brighteſt; till the moon,
Riſing in cloudy majeſty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerleſs light. Milton.

Such muſick worthieſt were to blaze
The peerleſs light of her immortal praiſe,
Whoſe luſtre leads us. Milton.

Her dreſs, her ſhape, her matchleſs grace,
Were all obſerv'd, as well as heav'nly face;
With ſuch a peerleſs majeſty ſhe ſtands,
As in that day ſhe took the crown. Dryden.

PEE'RLESSNESS. n. ſ. [from peerleſs.] Univerſal ſuperiority.

PEEVISH. adj. [This word Junius, with more reaſon than he commonly diſcovers, ſuppoſes to be formed by corruption from perverſe; Skinner rather derives it from beeviſh, as we ſay waſpiſh.]

1. Petulant; waſpiſh; eaſily offended; irritable; irraſcible; ſoon angry; perverſe; moroſe; querulous; full of expreſſions of diſcontent; hard to pleaſe.

She is peeviſh, ſullen, froward,
Proud, diſobedient, ſtubborn, lacking duty. Shakſp.

If thou haſt the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peeviſh town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, againſt theſe ſaucy walls. Shakſ.

Neither will it be ſatire or peeviſh invective to af-

[illegible] that infidelity and vice [illegible] ufed. Swift.

2. Expressing discontent, or fretfulness.

For what can breed more peevish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations? Sidney.

I will not presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king. Shakspeare.

Those deserve to be doubly laughed at, that are peevish and angry for nothing to no purpose. L'Estr.

PEE'VISHLY. adv. [from peevish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.

He was so peevishly opinionative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any. Hayward.

PEE'VISHNESS. n. s. [from peevish.] Irascibility; querulousness; fretfulness; perverseness.

Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peevishness of others; envying the publick should be managed without them. King Ch.

It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke.

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peevishness and spleen succeed. Swift.

PEG. n. s. [pegghe, Teutonick.]

1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.

Solid bodies foreshew rain; as boxes and pegs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon.

The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them claviculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff. Grew.

If he be cholerick, we shall treat him like his little friend, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Addison.

The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together. Addis.

A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more virtuous, or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift

2. The pins of an instrument on which the strings are strained.

You are well tun'd now; but I'll let down
The pegs that make this musick. Shakspeare.

3. To take a PEG lower. To depress; to sink: perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.

Remember how in arms and politicks,
We still have worsted all your holy tricks,
Trepann'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras.

4. The nickname of Margaret.

To PEG. v. a. To fasten with a peg.

I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters. Shakspeare.

Taking the shoots of the past spring, and pegging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelve-month they will be ready to remove. Evelyn.

PELF. n. s. [in low Lat. pelfra, not known whence derived; peuffe, in Norman, is frippery.] Money; riches.

The thought of this doth pass all worldly pelf. Sidney.

Hardy elf,
Thou darest view my direful countenance;
I read thee rash and heedless of thyself,
To trouble my still seat and heaps of precious pelf. Spenser.

Of traffick or return she never taketh care;
Not provident of pelf, as many islands are. Drayton.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myself. Shakspeare.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon split him on the former shelf:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace.

To the poor if he refus'd his pelf,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift.

PE'LICAN. n. s. [pelicanus, low Latin; pelican, French.] A large bird.

There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles: the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young, it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Calmet.

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shakspeare.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Hakewill on Providence.

PE'LLET. n. s. [from pila, Latin; pelote, French.]

1. A little ball.

A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eighty-seven pulses. Bacon

That which is sold to the merchants is made into little pellets and sealed. Sandys.

I dressed with little pellets of lint. Wiseman.

2. A bullet; a ball to be shot.

The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and so followeth a dilatation; and therefore, lest two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations; for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffocated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon.

How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll up in the ground? L'Estr

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more forcibly the air passes and drives the pellet. Ray

PE'LLETED. adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.

PE'LLMELL. adv. [pesle mesle, Fr.] Confusedly; tumultuously; one among another; with confused violence.

When we have dash'd them to the ground,
Then defie each other; and pell mell
Make work upon ourselves. Shakspeare.

Never yet did insurrection want
Such moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pell-mell havock and confusion. Shakspeare

After these senators have in such manner, as you grace hath heard, battered episcopal government, with their paper-shot, then they fall pell-mell upon the service book. White.

He knew when to fall on pell mell,
To fall back and retreat as well. Hudibras.

PELLS. n. s. [pellis, Latin.]

Clerk of the pells, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptorum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pellis exituum, a roll of the disbursements. Bailey.

PELLU'CID. adj. [pellucidus, Lat.] Clear; transparent; not opake; not dark.

The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone: this is the case of agates and other coloured stones, the colours of several whereof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture Woodward.

If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehemently as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton.

PELLUCI'DITY. } n. s. [from pellucid.]
PELLU'CIDNESS. } Transparency; clearness; not opacity.

The air is a clear and pellucid menstruum, in which the insensible particles of dissolved matter float, without troubling the pellucidity of the air; when on a sudden by a precipitation they gather into visible misty drops that make clouds. Locke.

We consider their pellucidness, and the vast quantity of light that passes through them without reflection. Keil.

PELT. n. s. [from pellis, Latin.]

1. Skin; hide.

The camel's hair is taken for the skin or pelt with the hair upon it. Brown.

A scabby tetter on their pelts will stick,
When the raw rain has pierc'd them to the quick. Dryden.

2. The quarry of a hawk all torn. Ainsw.

To PELT. v. a. [polteren, German, Skinner; contracted from pellet, Mr. Lye.]

1. To strike with something thrown. It is generally used of something thrown, rather with teasing frequency than destructive violence.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you? Shakspeare.

Do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds. Shaks.

No zealous brother there would want a stone
To maul us cardinals, and pelt pope Joan. Dryden.

Obscure persons have insulted men of great worth, and pelted them from coverts with little objections. Atterbury.

The whole empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces. Swift.

2. To throw; to cast.

My Phillis me with pelted apples plies,
Then tripping to the woods the wanton hies. Dryd.

PE'LTING. adj. This word in Shakspeare signifies, I know not why, mean; paltry; pitiful.

Could great men thunder, Jove could ne'er be quiet;
For every pelting petty officer
Would use his heav'n for thunder. Shakspeare.

Fogs falling in the land,
Have every pelting river made so proud,
That they have overborn their continents. Shaksp.

They from their pelting and poor pelting villages
Enforce their charity. Shakspeare.

A tenement or pelting farm. Shakspeare

PE'LTMONGER. n. s. [pellio, Lat. pelt and monger.] A dealer in raw hides.

PE'LVIS. n. s. [Lat.] The lower part of the belly.

PEN. n. s. [penna, Latin.]

1. An instrument of writing.

Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
Until his ink were temper'd with love's sighs. Shak

Eternal deities!
Who write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant on plates of brass. Dryden.

He takes the papers, lays them down again,
And, with unwilling fingers, tries the pen. Dryden.

He remembers not that he took off pen from paper till he had done. Fell

I can, by designing the letters, tell what new idea it shall exhibit the next moment, barely by drawing my pen over it, which will neither appear, if my hands stand still; or though I move my pen, if my eyes be shut. Locke.

2. Feather.

The pens that did his pinions bind,
Were like main-yards with flying canvas lin'd. Spenser.

3. Wing: though even here it may mean feather.

Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens; and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton

4. [from pennan, Saxon.] A small enclosure; a coop.

The printer alone would pen the humour ahead contained in the part, and forbid new humour. Bacon.
Their armour help'd their harm, cruſh'd in and bruis'd,
Into their ſubſtance pent. Milton
As when a prowling wolf
Whom hunger drives to ſeek new haunt for prey,
Watching where ſhepherds pen their flocks at eve
In hurdled cotes, amid the field ſecure,
Leaps o'er the fence with eaſe into the fold. Milton
The glaſs, wherein it is penned up, hinders it to deliver itſelf by an expanſion of its parts. Boyle.
The prevention of mutchief is preſcribed by the Jewiſh cuſtom, they pen up their daughters, and permit them to be acquainted with none Harvey.
Ah! that your bulwarks had been mine,
To pen the ſheep. Dryden

2. [from the noun; pret. and part. paſſ. penned.] To write. It probably meant at firſt only the manual exerciſe of the pen, or mechanical part of writing; but it has been long uſed with relation to the ſtyle or compoſition.
For prey theſe ſhepherds two he took,
Whoſe metal ſtuff he knew he could not bend
With hearſay pictures, on a window look,
With one good dance or letter finely penn'd. Sidn.
I would be loath to caſt away my ſpeech; for, beſides that it is excellently well penn'd, I have taken great pains to con it. Shakſpeare

PERFECTION. n. ſ. [perfectio, Lat. perfection, French.]

1. The ſtate of being perfect.

Man doth ſeek a triple perfection; firſt a ſenſual, conſiſting in thoſe things which very life itſelf requireth, either as neceſſary ſupplements or as ornaments thereof, then an intellectual, conſiſting in thoſe things which none underſtandeth man is capable of; laſtly, a ſpiritual and divine, conſiſting in thoſe things whereunto we tend by ſupernatural means here, but cannot here attain. Hooker.

It is a judgment maim'd and moſt imperfect,
That will confeſs perfection ſo could err
Againſt all rules of nature. Shakſpeare.

True virtue being united to the heavenly grace of faith makes up the higheſt perfection. Milton.

No human underſtanding being abſolutely ſecured from miſtake by the perfection of its own nature, it follows that no man can be infallible but by ſupernatural aſſiſtance. Tillotſon.

Many things impoſſible to thought,
Have been by need to full perfection brought. Dryden.

Too few, or of an improper figure and dimenſion to do their duty in perfection. Blackmore.

The queſtion is not, whether goſpel perfection can be fully attained; but whether you come as near it as a ſincere intention, and careful diligence can carry you. Law.

2. Something that concurs to produce ſupreme excellence. In this ſenſe it has a plural.

What tongue can her perfections tell,
In whoſe each part all pens may dwell? Sidney.

As heroick poëm requires, as its laſt perfection, the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking, which requires more of the active virtue than the suffering. Dryden.

3. Attribute of God.

If God be infinitely holy, just, and good, he must take delight in those creatures that resemble him most in these perfections. Atterbury

4. Exact resemblance.

To PERFE'CTIONATE. v. a. [perfectionner, Fr. from perfection.] To make perfect; to advance to perfection. A word proposed by Dryden, but not received, nor worthy of reception.

PERFU'ME. n. s. [parfume, French.]

1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.

Pomanders and knots of powders for divers perfumes are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon.

Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly wafted, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it. Digby.

2. Sweet odour; fragrance.

E'en the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addison.

No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield. Pope.

Pinks and lilies bloom,
And every bramble sheds perfume. Gay.

To PERFU'ME. v. a. [from the noun.] To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.

Your papers
Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For she is sweeter than perfume itself
To whom they go. Shakspeare.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp.

Then will I raise aloft the milk white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd. Shakspeare.

The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan. Bacon.

Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal. Bacon.

The pains she takes are vainly meant
To hide her amorous heart,
'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art. Granville.
See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies! Pope

PERFU'MER. n. f. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

A crowd of fashionable fops. Swift.

PERFU'NCTORILY. adv. [perfunctorie, Lat.] Carelesly; negligently; in such a manner as to satisfy external form.

His majesty casting his eye perfunctorily upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no sooner received it, than he delivered it to the lord keeper Clarendon.

I lay seriously to heart the clearness and evidence of their proofs, and not perfunctorily pass over all the passages of the gospel, which are written on purpose that we may believe, without weighing them. Lucas

Whereas all logick is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle very perfunctorily; of the fourth he has said nothing at all. Baker.

PERFU'NCTORY. adj. [perfunctorie, Lat.] Slight; careless; negligent.

A careless and perfunctory examination of things leads men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected Woodward

To PERFU'SE. v. a. [perfusus, Latin.] To tincture; to overspread.

These dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions. Harvey.

PERHA'PS. adv. [per and hap.] Peradventure; it may be.

Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run. Flatman.

Somewhat excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place Dryden.

His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love;
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps soft pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him. Smith.

It is not his intent to live in such ways as, for aught we know, God may perhaps pardon, but to be diligent in such ways, as we know that God will infallibly reward. Law.

PERIAPT. n. f. [περιαπτω.] Amulet; charm worn as preservative against disease or mischief. Hanmer.

The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly:
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts. Shakesp.

PERICARDIUM. n. f. [περι and καρδια; pericarde, Fr.] A thin membrane of a conick figure that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the pericardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry by its continual motion. Quincy.

PERICA'RPIUM. n. f. [περι and καρπος; pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelops the seed.

Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals. Ray.

1. The state of being in danger.
2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRA'NIUM. n. f. [from περι and cranium; pericrane, Fr.] The membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wiseman.

PERI'CULOUS. adj. [periculosus, Latin.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. Not in use.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about six many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause there periculous periods. Brown.

PERIE'RGY. n. f. [περι and ἐργον.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGE'E. } n. f. [περι and γη; perigée,
PERIGE'UM. } Fr.] That point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the creation, at the beginning of Aries, and the perigeum or nearest point in Libra. Brown.

PERIHE'LIUM. n. f. [περι and ἡλιος; perihelie, Fr.] That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50,000 years a cooling. Cheyne.

PERIL. n. f. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dut. periculum, Latin.]

1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.

Dear Pinocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney

How many perils do infold
The righteous man to make him daily fall? Spenser.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd Daniel
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have put'd the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.

Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbuth.

2. Denunciation; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakspeare.

PE'RILOUS. adj. [perilleux, Fr. from peril.]

1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker.

Her guard is chastity;
She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

Detate propitious to my dubious ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful fear:
For perilous th' assay, unheard the toil
T' elude the preference of a God by guile. Pope.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous shrewd. Hudibras.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly parlous.

'Tis a per'lous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakf.

PE'RILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

PE'RILOUSNESS. n. f. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.

PERI'METER. s. n. [περι and μετρεω; perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton.

PERIOD. n. f. [periode, Fr. περιοδος.]

1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends Holder.

We title a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shakf.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal period!
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suckling.

Light-conveying stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than the ordinary period; as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for to they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. Ben Jonson.

Is this the confidence you gave me?
Lean on it safely, not a period
Shall be unlaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, commonly wrapt up in a multitude period. Locke.

For the assistance of memorie, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts.

8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated: as, the periods of an empire.

From the tongue
The unfinish'd period falls. Thomson's Spring.

To PE'RIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he defires
To thofe have fhut him up, which failing to him,
Periods his comfort. Shakfpeare's Timon

PERIO'DICAL. } adj. [periodique, Fr. from PERIO'DICK. } period.]

PHILO'SOPHER. n. s. [philosophus, Latin; philosophe, French.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many found in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers natures of things, so must the evidences for them be; and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Wilkins.

They all our fam'd philosophers defie,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryd.

If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILO'SOPHERS stone. n. s. A stone dreamed of by alchymists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone
Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.

PHILOSO'PHICK. } adj. [philosophique,
PHILOSO'PHICAL. } French; from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The stoick last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue, and his virtuous man,
Wife, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.

How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone? Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakspeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryd.

PHILOSO'PHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonweals that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passions of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not found very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley's Sermons.

To PHILO'SOPHIZE. v. n. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to inquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glanville.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILO'SOPHY. n. s. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge natural or moral.

I had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my succour. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakspeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Digby.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argu'd then,
Vain wisdom all and false philosophy. Milton.

His decisions are the judgment of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the sinner not of the man. Rogers.

Phlebotomy is not such, but preserveth; the blood so flowing as if the body were all veins. Holyday.

Although in indispositions of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their situ-

tion, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as effectual to bleed on the right as the left. Brown.

Pains for the ſpending of the ſpirits, come neareſt to the copious and ſwift loſs of ſpirits by phlebotomy. Harvey.

PHLEGM. n. ſ. [φλέγμα; phlegme, Fr.]

1. The watery humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is ſuppoſed to produce ſluggiſhneſs or dulneſs.

Make the proper uſe of each extreme,
And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Roſc.

He who, ſupreme in judgment as in wit,
Might boldly cenſure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolneſs, though he ſung with fire;
His precepts teach but what his works inſpire.
Our criticks take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule ſupreme,
Choler preſide, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no diff'rence in the caſe,
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water, among chymiſts.

A linen cloth, dipped in common ſpirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, becauſe the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLE'GMAGOGUE. n. ſ. [φλέγμα and ἄγω; phlegmagogue, French.] A purge of the milder ſort, ſuppoſed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the ſtomachick ferment muſt be corrected, and phlegmagogues muſt evacuate it. Floyer.

PHLEGMA'TICK. adj. [φλεγματικὸς; phlegmatique, French; from phlegm.]

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane. Dryden.

PLA'NET. n. s. [planeta, Lat. πλανάω; planette, French.]

Planets are the erratick or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the Moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth: all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night. It is more than probable, that the diameters of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know 'tis so in our earth; and Flamsteed and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous villains! hath this lovely face
Rul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent? Shaks.

And planets, planet struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown.

A flower.

Of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.

His temples last with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryd.

Dr Lister has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison.

And pale Nymphæa with her clay-cold breath;
And poppies, which suborn the sleep of death. Harte

Po'pulace. n. s. [populace, French; from populus, Latin.] The vulgar; the multitude.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.

The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chuse themselves a master. Swift.

Po'pulacy. n. s. [populace, French.] The common people; the multitude.

Under colours of piety and ttious policies march, not only with security, but applause as to the populacy. King Charles.

When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populacy of sin upon the soul. Decay of Piety.

POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Latin.]

1. Vulgar; plebeian.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

The ennobled join'd in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.

So the popular votes inclines. Milton.

2. Suitable to the common people; familiar; not critical.

Homilies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.

3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.

It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker.

Such as were popular,
And well deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.

The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dryden.

His virtues have undone his country;
Such popular humanity is treason. Addison.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.

Popula'rity. n. s. [popularitas, Latin; popularité, French; from popular.]

1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affectation of popularity. Dryden.

Admire we then,
Or popularity, or stars, or strings,
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings? Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.

2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.

The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities, and circumstances, wh[...]ay the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

Po'pularly. adv. [from popular.]

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.

Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown.

To POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

Popula'tion. n. s. from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

Populo'sity. n. s. [from populous.] Populousness; multitude of people.

How it now conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are causes of numerosity in any species. Brown.

PO'PULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heav'nly company. Shakspeare.

For the greater part have kept
Their station; heav'n, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.

Po'pulously. adv. [from populous.] With much people.

Po'pulousness. n. s. [from populous.] The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple.

Po'rcelain. n. s. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from pour cent années; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semipellucid.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown.

The fine materials made it weak;
Porcelain, by being pure is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryd.

2. [portulaca, Lat.] A herb. Ainsworth.

Porch. n. s. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

Ehud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day
Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. B. Jonson.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakspeare.

Po'rcupine. n. s. [porc espi, or epic, Fr. porcospino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.

This stubborn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine. Shaksp.

Longbearded comets stick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

PORE. n. s. [pore, Fr. πόρος.]

1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of vallies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dryden.

To Pore. v. n. [πόρος is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while
Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakspeare.

A book was writ, called Tetrachordon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden.

Let him with pedants hunt for praise in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

He hath been poring so long on Fox's martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.

Po'reblind. adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Nearsighted; shortsighted.

Poreblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not poreblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are poreblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon.

Po'riness. n. s. [from pory.] Fulness of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the trepan above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wiseman.

Pori'stick method. n. s. [ποριστικὸς.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways, a problem may be solved. Dict.

PORK. n.f. [porc, French; porcus, Latin.] Swine's flesh unsalted.

You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting jews to christians, you raise the price of pork. Shakspeare.

All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Floyer.

PO'RKER. n.f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strut to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers lie pit beneath the sun. Pope.

PO'RKEATER. n.f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money. Shak.

PO'RKET. n.f. [from pork.] A young hog.

A priest appears,
And off'rings to the flaming altars bears:
A porket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears.
Dryden.

PO'RKLING. n.f. [from pork.] A young pig.

A hovel
Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porklings thou meanest to fat. Tusf.

POROʼSITY. n.f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the discovery of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon.

PO'ROUS. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Having small spiracles or passages.

Vultures and dogges have borne from every inn
His porous skin; and forth his soul is fled.
Chapman.

The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Water'd the garden. Milton.

Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive
And drink the liquid light, firm to retain
Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light.
Milton.

PO'ROUSNESS. n.f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous parts.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.

PO'RPHYRE. } n.f. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, Fr.]
PO'RPHYRY. } Marble of a particular kind.

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacham.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.

PO'RPOISE. } n.f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The PO'RPUS. } seahog.

And wallowing porpice sport and lord it in the food, Drayton.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatick together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.

Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus,
Swell'd with a dropsy like a porpus. Swift.

PORRA'CEOUS. adj. [porraceus, Lat. porrace, Fr.] Greenish.

If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wiseman.

PORRECTION. n.f. [porrectio, Lat.] The act of reaching forth.

PO'RRET. n.f. [porrum, Lat.] A scallion.

It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlick, molys and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown.

PO'RRIDGE. n.f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.

I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Shakspeare.

PO'RRIDGE POT. n.f. [porridge and pot.] The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.

PO'RRINGER. n.f. [from porridge.]

1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then let both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Estr.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

2. It seems in Shakspeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headdress; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak,—
—Why this was moulded on a porringer.
Taming of the Shrew

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Hen. VIII.

PORT. n.f. [port, Fr. portus, Lat.]

1. A harbour; a safe station for ships.

Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair, issuing on the shore,

I should be still
Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads.
Shakspeare.

The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon.

A weather-beaten vessel holds
Gladly the port. Milton.

2. [porta, Lat. porte, Sax. porte, Fr.] A gate.

Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughter of Zion. Psalms.

He I accuse,
Thy city ports by this hath enter'd. Shakspeare.

O foolish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. Shakspeare.

The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities, the other desolate and overgrown with grass, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.

From their ivory port the cherubim
Forth issu'd. Milton.

3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.

At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within fifteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Raleigh.

The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vig'rous seaman every port hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

4. [portée, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance; demeanour.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Whiles her fair face she reares up to the sky,
And to the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperature ye may descry. Spenser.

Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman? Shakspeare.

See Goodfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Fairfax.

Their port was more than human, as they stood,
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.

Now lay the line, and measure all thy court,
By inward virtue, not external port;
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love.
Dryden.

A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Collier.

Thy plumy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight.
Philips.

To PORT. v. a. [porto, Lat. porter, Fr.]

1. To carry in form.

Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharp'ning in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton.

PO'RTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Latin.]

1. Manageable by the hand.

2. Such as may be born along with one.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.

3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.

Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandize. Locke.

4. Sufferable; supportable.

How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow. Shakspeare.

All these are portable
With other graces weigh'd. Shakspeare.

PO'RTABLENESS. n.f. [from portable.] The quality of being portable.

2. [from port.] Porthole.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakspeare.

PO'RTAL. n.f. [portail, Fr. portella, Ital.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.

King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakspeare.

Though I should run
To those dividing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses steep
Their fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Savage.

He through heav'n,
That open'd wide her blazing portals, led
To God's eternal house, direct the way. Milton.

PO'RTLINESS. n. ſ. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour; bulk of perſonage.

Such pride is praiſe, ſuch portlineſs is honour,
That boldneſs innocence bears in her eyes;
And her fair countenance like a goodly banner
Spreads in defiance of all enemies. Spenſer.

When ſubſtantialneſs combineth with delightfulneſs, fulneſs with ſweetneſs, ſeemlineſs with portlineſs, and currantneſs with ſtayedneſs, how can the language found other than moſt full of ſweetneſs? Camden's Remains.

PO'RTLY. adj. [from port.]

1. Grand of mien.

Ruddy thou wrong'ſt my dear heart's deſire,
In finding fault with her too portly pride. Spenſer.

Your argoſies with portly ſail,
Like ſignors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or as it were the pageants of the ſea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakſpeare.

A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleaſing eye, and a moſt noble carriage. Shakſpeare.

A portly prince, and goodly to the ſight,
He ſeem'd a ſon of Anak for his height. Dryden.

2. Bulky; ſwelling.

Our houſe little deſerves
The ſcourge of greatneſs to be uſed on it;
And that fame greatneſs too, which our own hands
Have help'd to make ſo portly. Shakſpeare.

PO'RTMAN. n. ſ. [port and man.] An inhabitant or burgeſs, as thoſe of the cinque ports. Dict.

PO'RTRAIT. n. ſ. [portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little uſe in portraits, or the reſemblances of particular perſons, ſo neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with ſome ſpecks of frailty, ſuch as they have been deſcribed in hiſtory. Dryden.

The figure of his body was ſtrong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it muſt deſerve the praiſe given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

If a portrait painter is deſirous to raiſe and improve his ſubject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dreſs from a temporary faſhion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no ideas of meanneſs from its being familiar to us. Reynolds.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeneſs, conſiſts more in taking the general air, than in obſerving the exact ſimilitude of every feature. Reynolds.

To PO'RTRAIT. v. a. [portraire, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and ſhould be written in the following examples portray.

In moſt exquiſite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments of beauty, but alſo round about ſhadow the rude thickets and craggy ſlids. Spenſer.

I portrait in Arthur the image of a brave knight, p rtr yed in the twelve private moral virtues. Spenſ.

PO'RTRAITURE. n. ſ. [portraiture, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted reſemblance.

By the image of my caſe I ſee
The portraiture of his. Shakſpeare

Let ſome ſtrange myſterious dream,
Wave at his wings in airy ſtream
Of lively portraiture diſplay'd,
Softly on my eye-lids laid. Milton

Hereon was alſo the portraiture of a hart. Brown

This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Burnet.

Her wry-mouth'd portraiture Pope

Diſplay'd the faces her counſellors endure.

He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Baker

To PO'RTRAY. v. a. [portraire, Fr.]

1. To paint; to deſcribe by picture.

Take a tile, and ſo portray upon it the city Jeruſalem Ezekiel.

On phœnix queen was there portray'd too bright,
Beauty alone could beauty take ſo right. Dryden.

2. To adorn with pictures.

Shields
Various, with boaſtful argument portray'd. Milton.

PO'RTRESS. n. ſ. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

The portreſs of hell-gate reply'd. Milton.

The ſhoes put on, our faithful portreſs
Admits us in to ſtorm the fortreſs,
While like a cat with walnuts ſhod,
Stumbling at ev'ry ſtep the trod. Swift.

PO'RWIGLE. n. ſ. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully ſhaped.

That black and round ſubſtance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be diſcernible, and at laſt to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

PO'RY. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd, th' admiring ſon
Beholds the vaulted roofs of pory ſtone. Dryden.

To POSE. v. a. [from poſe, an old word ſignifying heavineſs or ſtupefaction, zepoſe, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a ſtand or ſtop.

Learning was poſ'd, philoſophy was ſet,
Sophiſters taken in a fiſher's net. Herbert.

How God's eternal ſon ſhould be man's brother,
Poſeth his proudeſt intellectual power. Crathaw.

The only remaining queſtion to me I confeſs is a poſing one. Hammond.

As an evidence of human infirmities, I ſhall give inſtances of our intellectual blindneſs, not that I deſign to poſe them with thoſe common enigmas of magnetiſm. Glanville.

Particularly in learning of languages, there is leaſt occaſion for poſing of children. Locke.

2. To appoſe; to interrogate.

She in the preſence of others poſed him and ſifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very Duke of York or no. Bacon

PO'SER. n. ſ. [from poſe.] One that aſks queſtions to try capacities; an examiner.

He that queſtioneth much, ſhall learn much; but let his queſtions not be troubleſome, for that is fit for a poſer. Bacon.

PO'SITED. adj. [poſitus, Latin. It has the appearance of a participle preterit, but it has no verb.] Placed; ranged.

That the principle that ſets on work theſe organs is nothing elſe but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus poſited or diſpoſed, is moſt apparently falſe. Hale.

POSI'TION. n. ſ. [poſition, Fr. poſitio, Lat.]

1. State of being placed; ſituation.

Iron having ſtood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of reſpectude and it retain the former poſition. Hutton.

They are the happieſt ſituations for fruits, by the excellence of air, the poſition of mountains, and the frequency of ſtreams. Temple.

Since no one ſees all, and we have different proſpects of the ſame thing, according to our different poſition to it, 'tis not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that eſcaped him Locke.

By varying the poſition of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the ſun's light, the colour of the ſun's reflected light conſtantly varied upon the ſpeculum as it did upon my eye. Newton

Place ourſelves in ſuch a poſition toward the object, or place the object in ſuch a poſition toward our eye, as may give us the cleareſt repreſentation of it, for a different poſition greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts' Logick.

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or ſin therein committed againſt God, with what confidence can we accuſe us, when your own poſitions are, that the things we obſerve ſhould every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thouſand lives? Hooker.

Let not the proof of any poſitions depend on the poſitions that follow, but always on thoſe which go before Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illation is to conclude from the poſition of the antecedent unto the poſition of the conſequent, or the remotion of the conſequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. [In grammar.] The ſtate of a vowel placed before two conſonants, as pámpous; or a double conſonant, as átle.

POSI'TIONAL. adj. [from poſition.] Reſpecting poſition.

The leaves of catapulia or ſpurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives ſtill do preach, is a ſtrange conceit, aſcribing unto plants poſitional operations. Brown.

PO'SITIVE. adj. [poſitivus, Lat. poſitif, French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; abſolute.

The power or bloſſom is a poſitive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

It is well and truly ſaid in ſchools, that in there is nothing poſitive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or ſubſiſt, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Perkins.

Hardneſs carries ſomewhat more of poſitive in it than impenetrability, which is negative, and is perhaps more a conſequence of ſolidity, than ſolidity itſelf. Locke.

Whatſoever doth or can exiſt, or be conſidered as one thing, is poſitive; and ſo not only ſimple ideas and ſubſtances, but modes alſo are poſitive beings, though the parts, of which they conſiſt, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Abſolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for poſitive words, that he would not bear arms againſt king Edward's ſon, though the words ſeem calm, yet it was a plain and direct overruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; ſtubborn in opinion.

I am ſometimes doubting, when I might be poſitive, and ſometimes confident out of ſeaſon. Feymer.

Some poſitive perſiſting ſops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always ſo;
But you, with pleaſure, own your errors paſt,
And make each day a critick on the laſt. Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth univerſally; that which is poſitive, not ſo. Hooker.

Although no laws but poſitive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be poſitive; poſitive laws are either permanent or elſe changeable, according as the matter itſelf is, concerning which they were made. Hooker.

The law is called poſitive, which is not inbred, imprinted, or infuſed, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is impoſed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White

Laws are but poſitive; love's pow'r we ſee,
Is nature's function, and her firſt decree Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to conſent to the enacting of ſuch a law, which has no view beſides the general good, unleſs another law ſhall at the ſame time paſs, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone, what is this but to claim a poſitive voice, as well as a negative? Swift.

6. Certain; aſſured: as, he was poſitive as to the fact.

PO'SITIVELY. adv. [from poſitive.]

1. Abſolutely; by way of direct poſition.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be eſteemed good or evil comparatively, and not poſitively or ſimply. Bacon

2. Not negatively.

It is impoſſible that any ſucceſſive duration ſhould be actually and poſitively infinite, or have infinite ſucceſſions already gone and paſt. Bentley

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me ſome breath, ſome little pauſe,
Before I poſitively ſpeak in this. Shakſpeare

It was abſolutely certain, that this part was poſitively yours, and could not poſſibly be written by any other. Dryden

4. Peremptorily; in ſtrong terms.

I would aſk any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not poſitively require humility and meekneſs to all men. Sprat.

PO'SITIVENESS. n. ſ. [from poſitive.]

1. Actualneſs; not mere negation.

The poſitiveneſs of ſin more commiſſion lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the poſitiveneſs of ſins of omiſſion is in the habitude of the will only. Norris

2. Peremptorineſs; confidence.

This peremptorineſs is of two ſorts; the one a magiſterialneſs in matters of opinion, the other a poſitiveneſs in relating matters of fact, in the one we impoſe upon men's underſtandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue

POSITI'VITY. n. ſ. [from poſitive.] Peremptorineſs; confidence. A low word.

Courage and poſitivity are never more neceſſary than on ſuch an occaſion; but it is good to join ſome argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be ſtrongly pronounced too. Watts.

POSITURE. n. ſ. [poſitura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Suppoſing the poſiture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and ſuppoſing all other things which did concur to the production of that caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary. Bramhall

PO'SNET. n. ſ. [from baſſinet, Fr. Skinner.] A little baſin; a porringer; a ſkillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of ſilver and tin in equal quantity, and alſo whether it yield more tinneſs more than ſilver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chafing diſhes, poſnets, and ſuch other ſilver veſſels. Bacon.

POSSE. n. ſ. [Latin.] An armed power, from poſſe comitatûs, the power of the ſhires. A low word.

The poſſe comitatûs, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon

As if the paſſion that rules, were the ſheriff of the place, and came off with all the poſſe, the underſtanding is ſeized. Locke.

To POSSE'SS. v. a. [poſſeſſus, Lat. poſſeder, French.]

1. To have as an owner; to be maſter of; to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let intruſions enter

How much you would?—
—Ay, ay, three thouſand ducats. Shakſpeare.

This man, whom hand to hand I ſlew in fight,
May be poſſeſſed with ſome ſtore of crowns. Shakſ.

This poſſeſſes us of the moſt valuable bleſſing of human life, friendſhip. Gov. of the Tongue

Seem I to thee ſufficiently poſſeſs'd
Of happineſs or not, who am alone
From all eternity? Milton.

I hope to poſſeſs chymiſts and corpuſcularians of the advantages to each party, by contederacy between them. Boyle.

The intent of this fable is to poſſeſs us of a juſt ſcale of the vanity of theſe craving appetites. L'Eſtrange.

Whole houſes, of their whole deſires poſſeſt,
Are often ruin'd at their own requeſt. Dryden.

Of fortune's favour long poſſeſs'd,
He was with one fair daughter only bleſs'd. Dryden.

We poſſeſſed ourſelves of the kingdom of Naples, the dutchy of Milan, and the avenue of France in Italy. Addiſon.

Endowed with the greateſt perfections of nature, and poſſeſſed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happineſs. Prior.

4. To fill with ſomething fixed.

It is of unſpeakable advantage to poſſeſs our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words, and actions at ſome laudable end. Addiſon.

Thoſe, under the great officers, know every little cafe that is before the great man, and if they are poſſeſſed with honeſt minds, will conſider poverty as a recommendation. Addiſon.

5. To have power over, as an unclean ſpirit.

Beware what ſpirit rages in your breaſt;
For ten inſpir'd, ten thouſand are poſſeſt. Roſcom.

Inſpir'd within, and yet poſſeſs'd without. Cleaveland.

I think, that the man is poſſeſſed. Swift.

6. To affect by inteſtine power.

He's poſſeſt with greatneſs,
And ſpeaks not to himſelf, but with a pride
That quarrels at ſelf-breath. Shakſpeare.

Let not your ears deſpiſe my tongue,
Which ſhall poſſeſs them with the heavieſt ſound
That ever yet they heard. Swift.

Poſſeſt with rumours full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear,
Shakſpeare.

What fury, O ſon,
Poſſeſſes thee to bend that mortal dart
Againſt thy father's head? Milton.

With the rage of all their race poſſeſt,
Stung to the ſoul the brothers ſtart from reſt. Pope.

POSSE'SSION. n. ſ. [poſſeſſion, Fr. poſſeſſio, Latin.]

1. The ſtate of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He ſhall inherit her, and his generation ſhall hold her in poſſeſſion. Eccleſiaſticus.

In poſſeſſion ſuch, not only of right,
I call you. Milton.

2. The thing poſſeſſed.

Do nothing to loſe the beſt poſſeſſion of life, that of honour and truth. Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and poſſeſſions. Locke.

3. Madneſs cauſed by the internal operation of an unclean ſpirit.

To POSSE'SSION. v. a. To inveſt with property. Obſolete.

To PO'SSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle; as milk with acids. Not uſed.

Swift as quickſilver it courſes through
The nat'ral gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a ſudden vigour, it doth poſſet
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholeſome blood. Shakſpeare.

POSSIBI'LITY. n. ſ. [poſſibilité, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the ſtate of being poſſible.

There is no let, but that as often as thoſe books are read, and need ſo requireth, the ſale of their differences may expreſſly be mentioned to bar even all poſſibility of error. Hooker.

Brother, ſpeak with poſſibilities,
And do not break into theſe woeful extremes Shakſ.

When we have for the proof of any thing ſome of the higheſt kinds of evidence, in this caſe it is not the ſuggeſtion of a mere poſſibility that the thing may be otherwiſe, that ought to be any ſufficient cauſe of doubting. Wilkins.

Conſider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of poſſibilities; and conſequently could have nothing to recommend him to Chriſt's affection. South.

A bare poſſibility, that a thing may be or not be, is no juſt cauſe of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotſon.

According to the multifariouſneſs of this mutability, to are the poſſibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the poſſibility of our imitation. Rogers.

POSSIBLE. adj. [poſſible, Fr. poſſibilis, Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

L'Estrange.

PRE'AMBLE. n. s. [preambule, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer? Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gain-sayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon.

With preambles sweet
Of charming symphony they introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryd.

PREA'MBULARY. } adj. [from preamble.]
PREA'MBULOUS. } Previous. Not in use, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHE'NSION. n. s. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown.

PREASE. n. s. Press; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred seas,
New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman

PREA'SING. part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PRE'BEND. n. s. [præbenda, low Lat. prebende, French.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.

His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PRE'BENDARY. n. s. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Spenser.

I bequeath to the reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift.

PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarious, Latin; precaire, French.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskilfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?
A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Spectator.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers.

PRECA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

If one society cannot meet or convene together, without the leave or licence of the other society; nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Lesley.

Our scene precariously subsists too long
On French translation and Italian song:
Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECA'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little adviseable. Sharp.

PRECAU'TION. n. s. [precaution, Fr. from precautus, Lat.] Preservative caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison.

To PRECAU'TION. v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRECEDA'NEOUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for præcidaneous; præcidaneus, Latin, cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and precedaneous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

To PRECE'DE. v. a. [præcedo, Lat. precéder, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durst provoke,
To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECE'DENCE. } n. s. [from præcedo, Latin.]
PRECE'DENCY. }

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past. Not used.

I do not like, but yet it does allay
The good precedence. Shakspeare.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain
Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been sain.
Shakspeare.

3. Adjustment of place.

Among the laws touching precedence in Justinian, divers are, that have not yet been so received every where by custom. Selden.

The constable and marshal had cognizance touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell
Precedence; none, whose portion is small
Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
Will covet more. Milton.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedency. Howel.

That person hardly will be found,
With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
Yet if another could precedence claim,
My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light as precedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the precedence in determining the will to the next action. Locke.

PRECE'DENT. adj. [precedent, Fr. præcedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,
Or thy precedent services are all. Shakspeare.

But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakspeare.

Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth. Shakspeare.

When you work by the imagination of another it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have precedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not have precedent to the creation of man. Hale.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRE'CEDENT. n. s. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,
The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakspeare.

No pow'r in Venice
Can alter a decree establish'd:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an errour, by the same example,
Will ruth into the state. Shakspeare.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw
Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.

PRE'CEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECE'NTOR. n. s. [præcentor, Lat. precenteur, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this precentor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hammond.

PRE'CEPT. n. s. [precepte, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECE'PTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. Not in use.

Men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptial medicine to rage;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread,
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakspeare.

PRECE'PTIVE. adj. [preceptivus, Latin; from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECE'PTOR. n. s. [præceptor, Latin; preceptеur, French.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stagyrite, unknown,
And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECE'SSION. n. s. [from præcedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.

PRECI'NCT. n. s. [præcinctus, Lat.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholick church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

This is the manner of God's dealing with those that have lived within the precincts of the church, they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. Perkins.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way
Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light,
Directly towards the new created world. Milton.

PRECIO'SITY. n. s. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.
2. Any thing of high price. Not used in either sense.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their precyosities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these precyosities More.

PRE'CIOUS. adj. [precieux, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected, only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,
Without leave taking? Shakspeare.

I never saw
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought
But begg'ry and poor luck. Shakspeare.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire
That riches grow in hell; that soil may best
Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.

More of the same kind, concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della Valle. Locke.

PRE'CIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.
2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRE'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRE'CIPICE. n. s. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakspeare.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread,
Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies
Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes,
And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His gen'rous mind the fair ideas drew
Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;
Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew,
Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then shew your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECI'PITANCE. } n. s. [from precipitant.]
PRECI'PITANCY. } Rash haste; headlong hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glanville.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glanville.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or letting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary Swift.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Watts.

PRECI'PITANT. adj. [præcipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause,
Downright into the world's first region throws
His flight precipitant. Milton.

The birds heedless while they strain
Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead
O'ertakes their speed; they leave their little lives
Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop so blithe and bold,
Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight,
And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was time to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.

PRECI'PITANTLY. adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

To PRE'CIPITATE. v. a. [præcipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

1. To throw headlong.

She had a king to her son-in-law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon.

Ere vengeance
Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light,
Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.

2. To urge on violently.

The virgin from the ground
Upstarting fresh, already clos'd the wound,

3. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short intermittent and swift recurrent pains do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harvey.

4. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well, but if they be daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.

Dear Erythræa, let not such blind fury
Precipitate your thoughts, nor let them working,
Till time shall lend them better means
Than lost complaints. Denham.

5. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew.

To PRECI'PITATE, v. n.

1. To fall headlong.

Hadst thou been aught but gosamer feathers,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'dst shiver like an egg. Shakspeare.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment in chymistry.

By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.

Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces increase, which might hasten him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECI'PITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.

Barcephas saith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

When the full flores their ancient bounds disdain,
Precipitate the furious torrent flows;
In vain would speed avoid, of strength oppose. Prior.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.

The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

3. Hasty; violent.

Mr. Guy died of a mortification of the bowels; 'twas the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Arbuthnot.

PRECI'PITATE. n. s. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.

As the effect separated, I rubbed the super-excrescence with the vitriol stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wiseman.

PRECI'PITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent praise or censure too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull
Furious he sinks, precipitately dull. Pope.

PRECIPITA'TION. n. s. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.

Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I fall
Be this to them. Shakspeare.

2. Violent motion downward.

That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation, and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.

Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the bluttering and violence, which must have attended those suppositious changes. Woodward.

4. In chymistry, subsidency: contrary to sublimation.

Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward.

PRECI'PITOUS. adj. [præcipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.

Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. King Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.

Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most defected by the way. Brown.

How precious the time is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Evelyn.

3. Rash; heady.

Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our triple hold,
Advice unsafe, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. præcisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakspeare.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise
Exacts our parting. Milton.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbuthnot.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The raillery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECI'SELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker.

He knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land
As his misdoubts present occasion,
His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shakf.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wott.

In his tract my wary feet have stept,
His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holder.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECI'SENESS. n. s. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much precisenes. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degrees of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECI'SIAN. n. s. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.

Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakspeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisians be,
Who for some cross or saint they in the window see,
Will pluck down all the church. Drayton.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

PRECI'SION. n. s. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I am unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECI'SIVE. adj. [from precisus, Latin.] Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precisive abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

To PRECLU'DE. v. a. [præcludo, Latin] To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniencies of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptation of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECO'CIOUS. adj. [præcocis, Lat. precoce, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts. Brown.

PRECO'CITY. n. s. [from precocious.] Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and a valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Howel.

To PRECO'GITATE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.] To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNI'TION. n. s. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCEI'T. n. s. [pre and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

To PRECONCEI'VE. v. a. [pre and conceive.] To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of care, defective. Glanville.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South.

PRECONCE'PTION. n. s. [pre and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECO'NTRACT. n. s. [pre and contract. This was formerly accented on the last syllable.] A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract;
To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakspeare.

To PRECONTRA'CT. v. a. [pre and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Ayliffe.

PRECU'RSE. n. s. [from præcurro, Latin.] Forerunning.

The like precurse of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shak.

PRECU'RSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. precurseur, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the precursors
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakspeare.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDA'CEOUS. adj. [from præda, Latin.] Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predaceous; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PRE'DAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and fought relief in vain. S. Boyse.

PRE'DATORY. adj. [prædatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

1. Plundering; practising rapine.

His ruff erect he rears,
And pricks up his predestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDESTINA'TION. n. f. [predestination, Fr. from predestinate.] Fatal decree; preordination.

Predestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foreseeth, providence foreseeth and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and predestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if predestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton.

PREDESTINA'TOR. n. f. [from predestinate.] One that holds predestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mine example let the flocks use,
Their fad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all predestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

To PREDE'STINE. v. a. [pre and destine.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid predestin'd empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINA'TION. n. f. [predetermination, French; pre and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is diametrically the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect to God, and not predetermined. Hammond.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of predetermination and irresistibility, stands in opposition to the Calvinists. Hammond.

To PREDETE'RMINE. v. a. [pre and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

Through either ocean, foolish man!
That pregnant word sent forth again,
Might to a world extend each atom there,
For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Prior.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.

Call the floods from high, to rush amain,
With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

O detestable passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arbuthnot.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio, a knave very voluble? Shakspeare.

Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakspeare.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A moft poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling ſorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakſpeare.

6. Free; kind. Obſolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own moſt pregnant and vouchſafed ear. Shakſpeare.

PRE'GNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.
2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thouſand moral paintings I can ſhew,
That ſhall demonſtrate theſe quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Shakſpeare.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is ſo pregnantly ſet forth in holy writ, that it is unqueſtionable; kings and prieſts are mentioned together. South.

PREGUSTA'TION. n.ſ. [præ and guſto, Lat.] The act of taſting before another.

To PREJU'DGE. v. a. [prejuger, Fr. præ and judico, Lat.] To determine any queſtion beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he ſtood upon his own title of the houſe of Lancaſter, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the diſinheriſon of the line of York. Bacon.

The child was ſtrong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the phyſicians do prejudge. Bacon.

The cauſe is not to be defended, or patronized by names, but arguments, much leſs to be prejudged, or blaſted by them. Hammond.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole caſe, by calling the united ſenſe of both houſes of parliament an univerſal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, leſt a greater cauſe ſhould be injured and prejudged thereby. Ayliffe.

To PREJU'DICATE. v. a. [præ and judico, Latin.] To determine beforehand to diſadvantage.

Our deareſt friend
Prejudicates the buſineſs, and would ſeem
To have us make denial. Shakſpeare.

Are you, in favour of his perſon, bent
Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJU'DICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of caſting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not propoſed to any of us to be practiſed at once as ſubjects or chriſtians, but merely as philoſophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepoſſeſſed by opinions.

Their works will be embraced by moſt that underſtand them, and their reaſons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown.

PREJUDICA'TION. n.ſ. [from prejudicate.] The act of judging without examination.

PREJUDICE. n.ſ. [prejudice, Fr. prejudicium, Lat.]

1. Prepoſſeſſion; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is uſed for prepoſſeſſion in favour of any thing or againſt it. It is ſometimes uſed with to before that which the prejudice is againſt, but not properly.

The king himſelf frequently conſidered more the perſon who ſpoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counſel itſelf that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifeſt prejudice to my cauſe will render their judgment of leſs authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reaſon, when I talk of practiſing to fly, ſilly people think me an owl for my pains. Addiſon.

2. Miſchief; detriment; hurt; injury. This ſenſe is only accidental or conſequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only becauſe prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to uſe it leſs: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any miſchief, which does not imply ſome partiality or prepoſſeſſion. In ſome of the following examples, its impropriety will be diſcovered.

I have not ſpake one the leaſt word,
That might be prejudice of her preſent ſtate,
Or touch of her good perſon. Shakſpeare.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakſpeare.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a ſign of weakneſs in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and buſineſs. Bacon.

How plain this abuſe is, and what prejudice it does to the underſtanding of the ſacred ſcriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will inſtruct us by his example, to fix the unſteadineſs of our politicks; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addiſon.

To PRE'JUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepoſſeſs with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half pillars wanted their expected height,
And roofs imperfect prejudic'd the ſight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved ſtudy to prejudice your mind, ſo far as to deſpiſe all other learning. Watts.

2. To obſtruct or injure by prejudices previouſly raiſed.

Companies of learned men, be they never ſo great and reverend, are to yield unto reaſon; the weight whereof is no what prejudiced by the ſimplicity of his perſon, which doth allege it. Hooker.

Neither muſt his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgift.

I am not to prejudice the cauſe of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminiſh; to impair; to be detrimental to. This ſenſe, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original ſenſe; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The ſtrength of that law is ſuch, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the ſame by any their ſeveral laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private reſolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube reſcu'd, and the empire ſav'd,
Say, is the majeſty of verſe retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy ſofter vein,
To ſing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the compoſition of its ingredients than the watry infuſion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of ſo grateful a flavour, the only care required in this compoſition was to chuſe ſuch an addition as might not prejudice it. London Diſpenſatory.

PREJUDI'CIAL. adj. [prejudiciable, French; from prejudice.]

1. Obſtructed by means of oppoſite prepoſſeſſions.

'Tis a ſad irreverence, without due conſideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial eye. Holyday.

2. Contrary; oppoſite.

What one ſyllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hooker.

3. Miſchievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This ſenſe is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was moſt prejudicial and moſt ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; ſo that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures.
Addiſon's Guardian.

A ſtate of great proſperity, as it expoſes us to various temptations, ſo it is often prejudicial to us in that it ſwells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury.

PREJUDI'CIALNESS. n.ſ. [from prejudicial.] The ſtate of being prejudicial; miſchievouſneſs.

PRE'LACY. n.ſ. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or poſt of a prelate or eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices, as that of the pontificate, a patriarchſhip, an archbiſhoprick and biſhoprick. Ayliffe.

2. Epiſcopacy; the order of biſhops.

The preſbyter, puff'd up with ſpiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themſelves proteſtants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Biſhops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other moſt judicious men, have eſpecially beſtowed their pains about the matter of juriſdiction. Hooker.

PRE'LATE. n.ſ. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An eccleſiaſtick of the higheſt order and dignity.

It beſeemeth not the perſon of ſo grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counſel, as the reſt were, or in a common perplexity to ſhew himſelf alone ſecure. Hooker.

Hear him but reaſon in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wiſh
You would deſire the king were made a prelate. Shakſpeare.

The archbiſhop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, ſaid one day to king Lewis XI. of France; Sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was ſlain. Bacon.

Yet Munſter's prelate ever be accurſt,
In whom we ſeek the German faith in vain. Dryd.

PRELA'TICAL. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Dict.

PRELA'TION. n.ſ. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; ſetting of one above the other.

PRELIBA'TION. n.ſ. [from prælibo, Lat] Taſte beforehand; effuſion previous to taſting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent ſoul, is a high prelibation of thoſe eternal joys. More.

PRELI'MINARY. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. prælimine, Latin.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My maſter needed not the aſſiſtance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majeſtick mien diſcovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELI'MINARY. n.ſ. Something previous; preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third conſiſts of the ceremonies of the oath on both ſides, and the preliminaries to the combat. Notes on Iliad.

PRE'LUDE. n.ſ. [prelude, Fr. præludium, Lat.]

1. Some ſhort flight of muſick played before a full concert.

My weak eſſay
[illegible] ſounds a prelude, and points out their prey. Young

2. Something introductory; something that only shows what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Those were the preludes of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.
Dryden.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great.
Addison.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another.
Clarissa.

To PRELU'DE. v. a. [preludo, Fr. præludo, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either fought'er holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to sing by night. Dryden.

PRELU'DIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a preludious bliss,
Two souls pickeering in a kiss. Cleaveland.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakspeare.

PRE'MISES. n. s. [præmissa, Lat. premisses, French.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premises, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the premises stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Decay of Piety.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her foes conclusions were not sound,
From premises erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift.

2. In law language, houses or lands: as, I was upon the premises.

PRE'MISS. n. s. [præmissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition. This word is rare in the singular.

Men that very presence fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear. Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a superiour.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a presence here to plead my thoughts. Shakspeare.

Thou with eternal wisdom didst converse,
Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
In presence of th' Almighty Father, pleas'd
With thy celestial song. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning presences. Glanville.

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by arms, but in the presence bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale?—
—Ay; and no man in the presence,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shakſp.

Odmar, of all this presence does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair. Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of presence, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful presence bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Collier.

How great his presence, how erect his look,
How every grace, how all his virtuous mother
Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes! Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they past, all gazing on them round
And to the presence mount, whose glorious view
Their feeble amazed senses did confound. Spenser.

An't please your grace, the two great cardinals
Wait in the presence. Shakspeare.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the presence in the court of France, and espying Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacham.

Kneller, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delusive hand,
As in the presence-chamber stand. Addison.

Presension. n. s. [præsensio, Lat.] Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's presension of winds is exact. Brown.

Present. adj. [present, Fr. præsens, Latin.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commensurate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately present with all the beings of the world. Hale.

Be not often present at feasts, not at all in dissolute company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.

Much have I heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never present on the place
Of those encounters. Milton.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things canst represent
As present. Milton.

A present good may reasonably be parted with upon a probable expectation of a future good which is more excellent. Wilkins.

The moments past, if thou art wise, retrieve
With pleasant mem'ry of the bliss they gave;
The present hours in present mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy. Prior.

The present age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward.

The present moment like a wife we shun,
And ne'er enjoy, because it is our own. Young.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

Thus I preſumptuous; and the viſion bright,
As with a ſmile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milton.

The pow'rs incens'd
Puniſh'd his preſumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprize he dy'd. Dryden.

Canſt thou love
Preſumptuous Crete, that boaſts the tomb of Jove? Pope.

PRESU'MPTUOUSLY. adv. [from preſumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently.

2. Irreverently.

Do you, who ſtudy nature's works, decide,
Whilſt I the dark myſterious cauſe admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, preſumptuouſly enquire. Addiſon.

3. With vain and groundleſs confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature perſuaſion of my being in Chriſt, and not ſuffer me to go on preſumptuouſly or deſperately in any courſe. Hammond.

PRESU'MPTUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from preſumptuous.] Quality of being preſumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRESUPPO'SAL. n. ſ. [pre and ſuppoſal.] Suppoſal previouſly formed.

Fame, not contented with her broad highway,
Delights, for change, thro' private paths to stray. Harte.

2. Alone; not accompanied.
3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to public.

When publick consent of the whole hath established any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compared, were private, however his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every entire society or body politick overrule all private of like nature in the same body. Hooker.

He sues
To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
A private man in Athens. Shakspeare.

What infinite heartease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
That private have not too, save ceremony? Shakspeare.

Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house. Peacham.

The first principles of christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets. Sanderson.

PRIVA'TION. n. s. [privation, Fr. privatio, Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within? Davies.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires,
That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
With bare privation sense is satisfy'd. Dryden.

After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned; these are privations. Watts.

2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.
3. The act of degrading from rank or office.

If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

PRI'VET. n. s. [ligustrum.] A plant. Miller.

PRI'VILEGE. n. s. [privilege, Fr. privilegium, Latin.]

1. Peculiar advantage.

Here's my sword,
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. Shakspeare.

He went
Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege
Hath omnipresence. Milton.

He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,
Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit.
Denham.

Smiles, not allow'd to beasts, from reason move,
And are the privilege of human love. Dryden.

When the chief captain ordered him to be scourged uncondemned, he pleads the legal privilege of a Roman, who ought not to be treated so. Kettlewell.

A soul that can securely death defy,
And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.

The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke.

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakesp.

To PRI'VILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.

The great are privileg'd alone,
To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.

He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate
To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
Obtain'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior.

2. To exempt from censure or danger.

The court is rather deemed as a privileged place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney.

He took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands.
Shakspeare.

This place
Doth privilege me, speak what reason will.
Daniel.

3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.

Many things are by our laws privileged from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale.

How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRI'VY. n. s. Place of retirement; necessary house.

Your fancy
Would still the same ideas give ye,
As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE. n. s. [prix, Fr.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize. Shakspeare.

Though their foe were big and strong, and often brake the ring,

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize. Dryden.

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Law.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despise;
Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden.

3. [prise, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots the did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the oozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck. Shakspeare.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize on thee. Chapman.

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbuthnot.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes
Soon to obtain and long possess the prize. Pope.

To PRIZE. v. a. [from appraiser; priser, Fr. appreciare, Lat.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour
Which I would free. Shakspeare.

A goodly price that I was prized at of them. Zechariah.

2. To esteem; to value highly.

I go to free us both of pain;
I priz'd your person, but your crown disdain.
Dryden.

Some the French writers, some our own despise;
The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope.

PRI'ZER. n. s. [priseur, Fr. from prize.] He that values.

It holds its estimate and dignity,
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
As in the prizer. Shakspeare.

PRI'ZEFIGHTER. n. s. [prize and fighter.] One that fights publickly for a reward.

Martin and Cranbe engaged like prizefighters. Arbuthnot and Pope.

In Fig the prizefighter by day delight. Bramston.

PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of: pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity increased in books pro and con Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when
Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABI'LITY. n. s. [probabilitas, Lat. probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down so agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hooker.

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their flocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the testimony of other credible persons. Wilkins.

If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability, nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright falsity. South.

Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds as fully satisfy a prudent man. Tillotson.

For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper studies, and sober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found among the generality of men. Law.

PRO'BABLE. adj. [probable, Fr. probabilis, Latin.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker.

The only reasonable inquiry is, which is of probables the most, or of improbables the least such. Hammond

I do not say, that the principles of religion are merely probable; I have before asserted them to be morally certain: and that to a man who is careful to preserve his mind free from prejudice, and to consider, they will appear unquestionable, and the deductions from them demonstrable. Wilkins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.

They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they conversed, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South.

PRO'BABLY. adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.

Diſtinguiſh betwixt what may poſſibly, and what will probably be done. L'Eſtrange.

Our conſtitution in church or ſtate could not probably have been long preſerved, without ſuch methods. Swift

PROBA'TIONER. n. ſ. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muſe thy praiſe rehearſe,
In no ignoble verſe;
But ſuch as thy own verſe did practiſe here,
When thy firſt fruits of poeſy were giv'n,
To make thyſelf a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thouſand churches, where theſe probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterneſs was but a probationer in the ſoil; and though it ſet forth ſome offsets to preſerve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cheriſh them. Decay of Piety.

PROBA'TIONERSHIP. n. ſ. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, ſuitable to that ſtate of mediocrity and probationerſhip, he has been pleaſed to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PRO'BATORY. adj. [from probo, Latin.] Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were not vindicatory puniſhments, but probatory chaſtiſements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBA'TUM EST. A Latin expreſſion added to the end of a receipt, ſignifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you expreſs,
That uncall'd Aland will poſſeſs
Your houſe and coach both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted leſs
By Banquo's reſtleſs ſprite:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you ſhall never ſee him more;
Take my advice, probatum eſt.
Why do the gods indulge our ſtore,
But to ſecure our reſt? Prior.

PROBE. n. ſ. [from probo, Lat.] A ſlender wire by which ſurgeons ſearch the depth of wounds.

To PROBE. v. a. [probo, Lat.] To ſearch; to try by an inſtrument.

Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and ſearch a purulent old ſore to the bottom. South.

He'd raiſe a bluſh, where ſecret vice he found;
And tickle, while he gently prob'd the wound. Dryden.

PRO'BITY. n. ſ. [probité, Fr. probitas, Lat.] Honeſty; ſincerity; veracity.

The truth of our Lord's aſcenſion might be deduced from the probity of the apoſtles. Fiddes

So near approach we their celeſtial kind,
By juſtice, truth, and probity of mind. Pope.

PRO'BLEM. n. ſ. [probleme, Fr. προβλημα.] A queſtion propoſed.

The problem is, whether a man conſtantly and ſtrongly believing that ſuch a thing ſhall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon.

Deeming that abundantly confirmed to advance it above a diſputable problem, I proceed to the next propoſition. Hammond.

Although in general we underſtood colours, yet were it not an eaſy problem to reſolve, why graſs is green? Brown.

This problem let philoſophers reſolve,
What makes the globe from weſt to eaſt revolve? Blackmore.

PROBLEMA'TICAL. adj. [from problem; problematique, Fr.] Uncertain; unſettled; diſputed; diſputable.

3. To incite; to inſtigate.

The Volſcians ſtand
Ready, when time ſhall prompt them, to make road
Upon's again. Shakſpeare.
Speak not by th' matter
Which your heart prompts you to, but with ſuch words
That roated in your tongue. Shakſpeare.
If they prompt us to anger, their deſign makes uſe of it to a further end, that the mind, being thus diſquieted, may not be eaſily compoſed to prayer. Dupper.
Rage prompted them at length, and found them arms. Milton.
Kind occaſion prompts their warm deſires. Pope.

4. To remind.

The inconceivable imperfections of ourſelves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are ſons of earth. Brown.

PRO'MPTER. n. ſ. [from prompt.]

1. One who helps a publick ſpeaker, by ſuggeſting the word to him when he falters.

Were it my cue to fight, I ſhould have known it
Without a prompter. Shakſpeare.
In florid impotence he ſpeaks,
And as the prompter breathes, the puppet ſqueaks Pope.

2. An admoniſher; a reminder.

We underſtand our duty without a teacher, and acquit ourſelves as we ought to do without a prompter. L'Eſtrange.

PRO'MPTITUDE. n. ſ. [promptitude, Fr. from promptus, Lat.] Readineſs; quickneſs.

PRO'MPTLY. adv. [from prompt.] Readily; quickly; expeditiouſly.

He that does his meſs chearfully, promptly, and readily, and the works of religion ſlowly, it is a ſign that his heart is not right with God. Taylor.

PRO'MPTNESS. n. ſ. [from prompt.] Readineſs; quickneſs; alacrity.

Had not theſe ſtops been given him by that accidental ticklenes, his great courage and promptneſs of mind would have carried him directly forward to the enemy, till he had met him in the open plains of Perſia. South.
From and rigid muſcles, ſtrong pulſe, activity, and promptneſs in animal actions, are ſigns of ſtrong fibres. Arbuthnot.

PRO'MPTUARY. n. ſ. [promptuaire, Fr. promptuarium, Latin.] A storehouſe; a repoſitory; a magazine.

This fountain is full expanded at top, ſerving as the ſtore-houſe or promptuary, that furniſheth forth matter for the ſeminal act of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

PRO'MPTURE. n. ſ. [from prompt.] Suggeſtion, motion given by another; inſtigation. Not uſed.

Two ſhe-bears taken by prompture of the blood;
Yet hath he in him ſuch a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up.
Shakſpeare.

To PROMU'LGATE. v. a. [promulgo, Lat.] To publiſh; to make known by open declaration.

Thoſe albeit I know be nothing ſo much hateful as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occaſion him to put forth divers other goodly works. Spenſ.
Thoſe, to whom he entruſted the promulgating of the goſpel, had far different inſtructions
Decay of Piety.
It is certain laws, by virtue of any function they receive from the promulgated will of the legiſlature, reach not a ſtranger, if by the law of nature every man hath not a power to puniſh offences againſt it. Locke.

PROMULGA'TION. n. ſ. [promulgatio, Lat. from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The ſtream and current of this rule hath come ſo far, as hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the goſpel. Hooker.
External promulgation, or ſpeaking the word, did not alter the ſame, in reſpect of the inward formal quality. Whole.
The very promulgation of the puniſhment will be part of the puniſhment, and anticipate the execution. South.

PROMULGA'TOR. n. ſ. [from promulgate.] Publiſher; open teacher.

How groundleſs a calumny this is, appears from the ſanctity of the chriſtian religion, which excludes fraud and falſehood; to alſo from the deſignments and aims of its firſt promulgators. Decay of Piety.

To PROMU'LGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publiſh; to teach openly.

The chief deſign of them is, to eſtabliſh the truth of a new revelation in thoſe countries, where it is firſt promulged and propagated. Atterbury.

PROMU'LGER. n. ſ. [from promulge.] Publiſher; promulgator.

The promulgers of our religion, Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles, raiſed men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. A tenſon.

Down thither prone in flight
He ſpeeds, and through the vaſt ethereal ſky
Sails between worlds. Milton.

4. Declivous; ſloping.

Since the floods demand,
For their deſcent, a prone and ſinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wiſe director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propenſe; diſpoſed. It has commonly an ill ſenſe.

The labour of doing good, with the pleaſure ariſing from the contrary, doth make men for the moſt part flower to the one and proner to the other, than that duty, preſcribed them by law, can prevail ſufficiently with them. Hooker.
Thoſe who are ready to confeſs him in judgment and profeſſion, are very prone to deny him in their doings. South.
If we are prone to ſedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which ſupplies buſineſs to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addiſon.
Still prone to change, though ſtill the ſlaves of ſtate. Pope.

PRO'NENESS. n. ſ. [from prone.]

1. The ſtate of bending downward; not erectneſs.

If erectneſs be taken, as it is largely oppoſed unto proneneſs, or the poſture of animals looking downwards, carrying their centers, or oppoſite part to the ſpine, directly towards the earth, it may admit objection. Brown.

2. The ſtate of lying with the face downward; not ſupineneſs.

3. Deſcent; declivity.

4. Inclination; propenſion; diſpoſition to ill.

The holy ſpirit ſaw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn and that rightcouſneſs is the leſs accounted of, by reaſon of the pronenſs of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker.
The loud boaſting ſpirit from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall,
And this declining pronenſs unto nought,
Is ev'n in that ſin that we are born withal. Davies.
He inſtituted this worſhip, becauſe of the carnality of their hearts, and the pronenſs of the people to idolatry. Tillotſon.
The pronenſs of good men to commit ſin wanes in whatſoever ſhape it appears. Atterbury.
How great is the pronenſs of our nature, to comply with this temptation! Rogers.

The cooks make no more ado, but ſlicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.
When cum his ſea-coal prong threw by,
And baſely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.
Be mindful
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move
The cruſted earth. Dryden.

PRO'NITY. n. ſ. [from prone.] Proneneſs. Not uſed.

Of this mechanick pronity, I do not ſee any good tendency. Mare.

PRONOU'N. n. f. [pronom, Fr. pronomen, Latin.] A word that is used instead of the proper name.

I, thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to perſons, and uſed inſtead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themſelves, but uſed inſtead of nouns. Clarke.

To PRONOU'NCE. v. a. [prononcer, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]

1. To ſpeak; to utter.

He pronounced all theſe words unto me with his mouth. Jeremiah.

2. To utter ſolemnly; to utter confidently.

She
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce diſhonour of her. Shakſpeare.

I have pronounced the word, ſaith the Lord. Jer.

So was his will
Pronounc'd among the gods. Milton.

Sternly he pronounc'd the rigid interdiction. Milton.

Abſalom pronounc'd a ſentence of death againſt his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of ſpeech.

Language of man pronounc'd
By tongue of brute, and human ſenſe expreſs'd. Milt.

Though diverſity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them eaſier. Holder.

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOU'NCE. v. n. To ſpeak with confidence or authority.

How confidently ſoever men pronounce of themſelves, and believe that they are then moſt ſecure, when they are moſt eager and impatient, yet 'tis ſure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Decay of Piety.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wiſe men will, in matters of diſcourſe, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act juſtly. South.

PRONOU'NCER. n. ſ. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof ſhall be condemned in expences. Ayliffe.

PRONUNCIA'TION. n. ſ. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciation, Fr.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The deſign of ſpeaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, eaſy, and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been ſearched out that were ſerviceable for the purpoſe. Holder.

It were eaſy to produce thouſands of his verſes, which are lame for want of half a foot, ſometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwiſe. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetorick which teaches to ſpeak in publick with pleaſing utterance and graceful geſture.

PROOF. n. ſ. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; teſtimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always ſo teſtified, I ſee not how we ſhould poſſibly win a proof more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof ſufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials ſhould be altered, yet the proof of every thing muſt needs be by the teſtimony of ſuch perſons as the parties ſhall produce. Spenſer.

That which I ſhall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof ſo high. Shakſpeare.

One foul miſdeed, whereof good proof
This day affords. Milton.

Things of ſeveral kinds may admit and require ſeveral ſorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, becauſe it cannot be made out, by ſuch kind of proofs of which the nature of ſuch a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either ſenſible proof, or demonſtration of ſuch matters as are not capable of ſuch proofs, ſuppoſing them to be true. Wilkins.

Thus, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates,
And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.

Thoſe intervening ideas, which ſerve to ſhew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Teſt; trial; experiment.

Retire or taſte thy folly, and learn by proof,
Hell-born! not to contend with ſpirits of heav'n. Milton.

Samſon,
This day to Dagon is a ſolemn feaſt:
Thy ſtrength they know ſurpaſſing human race,
And now ſome publick proof thereof require
To honour this great feaſt. Milton.

When the imagination hath contrived the frame of ſuch an inſtrument, and conceives that the event muſt infallibly anſwer its hopes, yet then does it ſtrangely deceive in the proof. Wilkins.

Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more,
Becauſe he ſhew'd, by proof, 'twas eaſy to be poor. Dryden.

My paper gives a humorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addiſon.

Here for ever muſt I ſtay,
Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.

3. Firm temper: impenetrability; the ſtate of being wrought and hardened, till the expected ſtrength is found by trial to be attained.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy bleſſings ſteel my lance's point. Shak.

To me the cries of hiſſing ſerpents are charms,
Knots be my fetters, and of proof my arms,
I aſk no other ſhelter of my ſhame. Dryden.

See arms of proof, ſuch for my ſelf and thee;
Chuſe thou the beſt. Dryden.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Pallas's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him Shakſpeare.

5. In printing, the rough draft of a ſheet when firſt pulled.

PROOF. adj. [This word, though uſed as an adjective, is only elliptically put for of proof.]

1. Impenetrable; able to reſiſt.

Now put your ſhields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proof than ſhields. Shakſpeare.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, ſift thee, and confeſs have found thee
Proof againſt all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton.

He paſt expreſſion lov'd,
Proof to diſdain, and not to be diſcourag'd. Dryden.

When the mind is thoroughly tinctured, the man will be proof againſt all oppoſitions. Collier.

Guiltleſs of hate, and proof againſt deſire;
That all things weighs, and nothing can admire. Dryden.

When a capuchin, thought proof againſt bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he died a little after. Addiſon.

2. It has either to or againſt before the power to be reſiſted.

Imagin'd wife,
Conſtant, mature, proof againſt all aſſaults. Milton.

Deep in the frowzy Alps, a lump of ice
By froſt was harden'd to a mighty price;
Proof to the ſun it now ſecurely lies,
And the warm dog-ſtar's hotteſt rage deſies. Addiſ.

The god of day,
To make him proof againſt the burning ray,
His temples with celeſtial ointment wet. Addiſon.

PROO'FLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.

Some were ſo manifeſtly weak and proofleſs, that he muſt be a very courteous adverſary, that can grant them. Boyle.

To PROP. v. a. [proppen, Dutch.]

1. To ſupport by placing ſomething under or againſt.

What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prop, or bind,
One night derides. Milton.

2. To ſupport by ſtanding under or againſt.

Like theſe, earth unſupported keeps its place,
Though no fixt bottom props the weighty maſs. Creech.

Eternal ſnows the growing maſs ſupply,
Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent ſky;
As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

3. To ſuſtain; to ſupport.

The nearer I find myſelf verging to that period, which is to be labour and ſorrow, the more I prop myſelf upon thoſe few ſupports that are left me. Pope.

PROP. n. ſ. [proppe, Dutch.] A ſupport; a ſtay; that on which any thing reſts.

The boy was the very ſtaff of my age, the very prop. Sidney.

You take my houſe, when you do take the prop
That doth ſuſtain my houſe; you take my life,
When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakſp.

Some plants creep along the ground, others about other trees or props, and cannot ſupport themſelves. Bacon.

That he might on many props repoſe,
He ſtrengths his own, and who his part did ſhare. Davies.

Again, if by the body's prop we ſtand,
If on the body's life, her life depend,
As Meleager's on the fatal brand,
The body's good the only would intend. Davies.

Faireſt unſupported flower
From her beſt prop to fall. Milton.

The current of his wet'ries found no ſtop,
Till Cromwell came, his party's cheefeſt prop. Waller.

'Twas a conſiderable time before the great engagements that fell reſted in a firm poſture, for the props and ſtays, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Burnet.

The props return
Into thy houſe, that bore the burden'd vines. Dryd.

Had it been poſſible to find out any real and ſure foundation for Arminius to reſt upon, it would never have been left to ſtand upon artificial props, or ſubſiſt by ſubtlety and management. Waterland.

PRO'PAGABLE. adj. [from propagate.] Such as may be ſpread; ſuch as may be continued by ſucceſſion.

Such creatures as are produced each by a ſingular ſeed, conſtitute a diſtinct propagable kind of creatures. Ray.

To PROPAGATE. v. a. [propago, Lat.]

1. To continue or ſpread by generation or ſucceſſive production.

All that I eat, or drink, or ſhall beget,
Is propagated curſe! Milton.

Is it an elder brother's duty ſo
To propagate his family and name;
You would not have yours die and buried with you. Otway.

From hills and dales the cheerful cries reſound
For echo hunts along, and propagates the ſound. Dryden.

2. To extend; to widen.

I have upon a high and pleaſant hill
Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the baſe o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deſerts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the boſom of this ſphere
To propagate their ſtates. Shakſpeare.

3. To carry on from place to place, to promote.

Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Decay of Piety.

Who are thoſe that truth muſt propagate,
Within the confines of my father's ſtate? Addiſon.

Thoſe who ſeek truth only, and deſire to propagate nothing elſe, freely expoſe their reaſon to the teſt. Locke.

Becauſe denſe bodies conſerve their heat a long time, and the denſeſt bodies conſerve their heat the longeſt, the vibrations of their parts are of the laſting nature; and therefore may be propagated alſo to fibres of uniform denſe matter to a great diſtance,

... conveying into the brain the impressions made upon all ... organs of sense. Newton.

4. To increase; ... promote.

Griefs of mine own lie ... in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have ... prest
With more of thine. Shakspeare.

3. Neat; pretty; exact.

But for a fine, quaint, graceful and excellent faſhion, your's is worth ten on't. Shakſpeare.

Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, ſhe ſhall be looſe enrob'd
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head.
Shakſpeare.
I never ſaw a better faſhion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleaſing, nor more commendable. Shakſpeare.

4. Subtly excogitated; fineſpun.

I'll ſpeak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies ſought my love,
Which I denying, they fell ſick and died. Shakſp.
He his fabrick of the heav'ns
Hath left to their diſputes, perhaps to move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide Hereafter. Milton.

5. Quaint is, in Spenſer, quailed; depreſſed. I believe by a very licentious irregularity.

With ſuch fair ſlight him Guyon fail'd:
Till at the laſt, all breathleſs, weary and faint,
Him ſpying, with freſh onſet he aſſail'd,
And kindling new his courage, ſeeming quaint,
Struck him ſo hugely, that through great conſtraint
He made him ſtoop. Spenſer.

6. Affected; foppiſh. This is not the true idea of the word, which Swift ſeems not to have well underſtood.

To this we owe thoſe monſtrous productions, which under the name of trips, ſpies, amuſements, and other conceited appellations, have over-run us, and I wiſh I could ſay, thoſe quaint fopperies were wholly abſent from graver ſubjects. Swift.

QUAI'NTLY. adv. [from quaint.]

1. Nicely; exactly; with petty elegance.

When was old Sherewood's hair more quaintly curl'd,
Or Nature's cradle more enchas'd and purl'd. Ben J.

5. To ease; to assuage.

He balms and herbs there to apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,
That in short space he has them qualify'd,
And him restor'd to health that would have dy'd. Spenser.

6. To modify; to regulate.

It hath no larinx or throttle to qualify the sound. Brown.

QUA'LITY. n. f. [qualitas, Latin; qualité, French.]

1. Nature relatively considered.

These being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.

Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.

Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.

The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Locke.

2. Property; accidental adjunct.

In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakspeare.

No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be inhesident in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our imagination, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.

3. Particular efficacy.

O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakspeare.

4. Disposition; temper.

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shakspeare.
